McCarran Joins Nye to Demand Probe Into NRA

Bi-Partisan Move for Inquiry Into 'Monopoly' Charges Under Way.

Committee Fight Snags Resolution

By Robert C. Albright.

Progressive Republicans and liberal Democrats yesterday combined forces for a two-way Senate investigation of NRA, delving alike into monopoly charges and alleged code abuses, and providing the first serious obstacle to extension of the recovery set-up in its present form.

Sponsored jointly by Senators Nye (Republican), North Dakota, and McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, a resolution for a sweeping NRA inquiry was laid before the Senate. No action was taken when a tug of war developed between the Finance and Commerce Committees over jurisdiction.

Entirely independent of the Nye-McCarran proposal, however, plans were being laid in a Senate Judiciary sub-committee for investigation into NRA "monopoly" charges, under a resolution by Senator King (Democrat), Utah. The Judiciary Committee already has quietly acted.

Borah a Member.

Senator King is chairman of the investigating sub-committee, and Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, is a member. Both King and Borah said last night the Judiciary subcommittee can broaden its inquiry to cover most of the ground mentioned in the Nye-McCarran resolution, if it is blocked in the Senate.

The Utahan said he will call a meeting of the sub-committee in a few days to determine how large an appropriation will be asked to finance the inquiry. He said the group wants to gather essential facts before the Administration submits concrete proposals for a two-year NRA extension.

Senator Nye made an unsuccessful effort yesterday to refer his broader resolution to the Senate Commerce Committee, headed by Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, where Nye and McCarran insisted it would get "a fair hearing." Copeland's committee recently sponsored hearings to get "a New Deal for business."

Couzens Blocks Move.

Nye's move was blocked by Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan. He insisted the resolution go to the Finance Committee, of which he is a member. It is the finance committee, however, under Chairman Pat Harrison, which plans in a few days to present the Administration bill for NRA extension. So Nye and McCarran let the matter go over, serving notice that they will resist to the last ditch any Finance Committee consideration.

Nye said last night he may ask instead that his resolution go to the judiciary sub-committee now considering the King charges.

Yesterday's activity marked renewal of last session's efforts by Nye and Borah to prove alleged NRA discrimination against small business, which ended in an open break with the then recovery administrator, Gen. Hugh Johnson.

"I have all of the facts necessary to satisfy myself in this matter,"

GEN ROBERT E. WOOD.

Wood Picked As Trade Aid On Job Plan

Head of Sears, Roebuck Named as Chairman of Committee.

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt took business into partnership with the Administration yesterday in administering the proposed $4,880,000,000 works relief fund.

He approved appointment of Gen. Robert E. Wood, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., as chairman of an advisory committee to work with him in spending the relief money.

At the same time, it was learned that the President plans to administer the works program through a board rather than through a single individual. It was indicated Gen. Wood probably would be a member of the board.

Secretary Roper, announcing the Wood committee, referred to it as "something new in American politics."

Roper Announces Plan.

Announcement of the plan followed a visit to the White House by Secretary Roper, H. P. Kendall, chairman of the business advisory and planning council of the Commerce Department, and Gen. Wood.

In announcing the plan, Secretary Roper said it had been suggested to President Roosevelt about two weeks ago and that he had at that time expressed his approval. He said the visit to the White House yesterday was for the purpose of acquainting the President with details of the proposal.

"The President said," Roper continued, "that he would like to have a committee of business men act in an advisory capacity with the agency or board administering the works fund in order that the board might have the business man's viewpoint in canvassing projects and giving views and suggestions."

Kendall, following the White House conference, said the advisory committee would be a combination of committees already set up within the Commerce Department advisory council. He said the committee would be formed from existing committees on private construction, financing of private construction and decentralization of industry.

Will Widen Its Scope.

He indicated the new committee, however, would go outside the ranks of the present advisory body and would include economists and business men not now active in the department.

Chairmen of the committees which Kendall said would be included in the new advisory body are William A. Julian, Treasurer of the United States; A. P. Greensfelder, St. Louis contractor, and Col. Robert Elbert, president of the Oakburne Corporation of New York.

Secretary Roper and Gen. Wood made it clear that the board to be set up by the President would actually allocate the money for various projects, but that they would consider the suggestion of the business committee.

Many leading business men have expressed opposition to the proposed works program on the ground that it threatens competition with private enterprise. Many have favored a direct dole in preference to work relief. Appointment of the Wood committee is looked upon as a recognition of these objections and as an opportunity to business to express its position in connection with specific projects.

Job One of Suggestion.

Gen. Wood, a man of medium height, with keen gray eyes and soft-spoken, with none of the traditional bluster of the military man, explained that he understood the job of his committee to be one of merely suggesting "where we think the money should be allocated."

"There is no obligation upon the President to follow our suggestions," he said.

Incidentally, Gen. Wood denied emphatically a report that he might be called upon to head the NRA under the proposed new law.

"I have not been approached on the subject and if the job should be

Administration Preparing New Aid to Business

Plans Wider Scope for RFC and FHA Loans, Help to Exporters.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

The Administration yesterday was preparing to revamp its business program for a new attack aimed at loosening up the real estate mortgage market, breaking down the resistance to new construction and removing the obstacles to foreign trade.

New developments were:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, giant financing agency with $100,000,000 available to throw into the mortgage market, drafted regulations which probably will be made public next week, under which it will make loans to, or become a partner in, private mortgage companies.

James A. Moffett, Federal housing administrator, declared that a survey of industrial plants indicated a potential demand of $1,500,000,000 for modernizations. Under a bill now before Congress, the FHA would be able to insure modernization loans up to $50,000 in amount.

Officials of the Export-Import Banks tabulated figures showing the immense sum tied up in foreign "blocked exchange." This is preliminary to a new solution now being formulated for the exchange restrictions that delay payment to American exporters.

Hopes to End Tie-Up.

Under authority recently granted by Congress, RFC is empowered to purchase stock in existing mortgage institutions, or to help organize new ones. By this means Chairman Jesse H. Jones has expressed the hope of breaking the mortgage log-jam in many parts of the country.

The regulations will follow closely those drafted in October for "mortgage trust companies." This effort was a complete failure, Jones later conceded, not one company applying for RFC help. He explained that State restrictions on trust companies killed this scheme in infancy.

The RFC also is getting ready to pump funds in another new business channel. The act extending its life two more years authorized it to lend to any agency which finances the sale of electrical or household equipment.

Caught in Raid Here

'Checker Blind' Solved by Little and U. S. Agents in Gaming Arrest.

The reputed "police-drill" system of the Kayeucka Athletic Club, at 1121 Fourteenth street, was of no avail yesterday when the vice squad and two deputy United States marshals, fortified with warrants charging gaming violations, entered by the front door.

Buzzers sounded, police said, and when they reached the fourth floor, where the alleged gaming was said to be centered, they came upon 51 men engaged in the innocent pastime of playing checkers and looking at signs on the wall which said, "No Gambling Allowed."

The 51 were bundled into patrol wagons and taken to headquarters for questioning.

Elaborate Layout.

The elaborate establishment—the first floor held an array of legal slot machines and prizes; the second, a billiard parlor; the third, a gymnasium with boxing ring and punching bags, and the fourth the "checker room"—was operated by "Dutch" Irwin, police said. He was taken into custody.

While at first glance the raiding party found only the innocent appearing checker tables, a more detailed search, they said, located a hidden compartment under a window sill where betting slips were found. In a corner one policeman found $250 in bills. Two billiard tables on the fourth floor, police said, were used for dice games.

Lieut. George Little, vice squad leader, was in charge of the raid. He was accompanied by Thomas Ott and Thomas East, both deputy United States marshals. The United States commissioner's warrant, Lieut. Little said, was obtained after vice squad members had made horse racing bets at the establishment.

"Police Drills."

Lieut. Little said the slot machine parlor with its prizes, the gymnasium and the billiard room were all a blind to hide the gaming activities conducted on the first floor. He said he had learned that periodic "police drills" were held so gaming evidence could be secreted in event of a raid. Buzzer signals were used for warning.

Little said probably several persons would face charges after questioning of all those found in the place was completed. Those who were only customers will be booked as witnesses, he said.

All equipment in the establishment which police thought had been used in gambling was carried out to the police warehouse. Among the items found by police were membership application blanks and blank "guest cards."

Italy Replies To Ethiopia With Troops

15,000 Will Leave for Abyssinia Before End of Week.

Some Already on Way; France Also to Send Reinforcements.

Rome, Feb. 14 (AP).—Soldiers and troops will be Benito Mussolini's reply to Ethiopia's defiant disclaimer of responsibility for Italo-Ethiopian hostilities in Africa.

A government spokesman said tonight no written reply will be sent to Emperor Haile Selassie, whose forthright communication handed to Il Duce yesterday blamed Italians for the border conflicts.

Instead, it was revealed informally, detachments of Italian troops will start leaving Sicily Saturday for Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, Italy's colonies lying to the east of the African Emperor's domain.

Paris to Reinforce Troops.

(Dispatches from Paris said the French Government also would reinforce her troops in French Somaliland in order to forestall further incidents such as the slaying of 17 French colonials January 18, for which Ethiopia has agreed to pay "exemplary damages.")

As the Fascist Grand Council met to decide what action shall be taken in the face of Ethiopia's initial refusal to pay indemnities for Italian soldiers in border clashes, the government spokesman revealed that some small units of mobilized troops already have left for the colonies, adequately supplied with materials for war.

Many thousands should have left by the end of the week, he said. It was learned 15,000 troops will be en route within the week.

The move, the spokesman emphasized, does not necessarily mean war. He said the troops are being dispatched to reinforce colonial detachments and obviate the danger of further attacks.

War Unlikely Before May 1.

Military circles said tonight there was little likelihood of hostilities, if they develop, before May 1.

The rainy season begins in about ten days, they pointed out, and lasts two months. During that time the newly arrived troops will be moved up to the border and accustomed to new climate and conditions.

The government spokesman said there was still no news concerning the agreement reported to have been reached at Addis Ababa to neutralize the zone in which hostilities have occurred. That was one of the demands which authoritative sources said Italy made on Ethiopia after the last conflict, which occurred at Afdub January 29.

It wats reported tonight that native troops from Tripoli already have left for Eritrea. Another report said troops now being mobilized in Italy might be sent to Tripoli for a month to get them accustomed to desert climate before dispatching them to the desert climate farther south.

Second Mobilization.

A second mobilization is ready to follow that already in progress, it was learned tonight, in case it is deemed necessary.

Terming Emperor Haile Selassie's denial of Ethiopian blame in the newest conflicts "ridiculous," the government spokesman said:

The Ethiopians say they could not have attacked Afdub because the Italians had already evacuated it, but that they, however, did not enter.

"How, therefore, could they have known the Italians had evacuated it?"

There was no confirmation of rumors here that new hostilities had taken place along the border since the clash at Afdub.

Any projected military expedition into Ethiopia will be entirely an Italian affair, it was indicated in official circles.

The officially controlled ress has been publishing voluminous reports of reactions from France and England, indicating that these nations would not oppose Italian penetration in Ethiopia.

This brought to light again the question of the Italian "free hand" in Ethiopia supposed to have been an unwritten concomitant of the recent agreements here between Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France and Mussolini.

Any cooperation from France in an Italian military campaign would therefore be passive, military circles say.

Hauptmann Appeals For Funds to Fight On In His First Interview

First Photo of Hauptmann in Cell

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Wearing wrinkled and baggy denim trousers, Bruno Hauptmann is shown in his cell. It is his first picture in jail since his arrest and first since his conviction of murder of Lindbergh baby.

I Am Innocent, There's Nothing to Confess, He Says.

Battle Just Begun, Reilly's Comment

(Copyright, 1935, by United Press.)

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 14.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann is ready to walk through the green door to the electric chair "like a man," he said tonight in the first interview he has granted in Hunterdon County Jail.

The man who is under sentence of death for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, stood behind the wire screen on the second floor of the jail and talked in that same metallic voice that rang through the courtroom when he was testifying in his own defense.

The electric lights that glare white and hot in his cell 24 hours a day, cast shadows in the hollows of Hauptmann's cheeks. He was dressed in an undershirt, in gray-brown trousers and shoes that contained no laces. His belt and shoe laces have been taken away from him to frustrate any attempt at suicide.

Maintains Innocence.

He can not and will not confess to the crime of which he has been convicted, Hauptmann said, because he still contends he is innocent and believes his lawyers will win their fight for his life in the higher courts.

"Confession?" he asked. "If I had wanted to make any confession I would have done so five months ago and saved my wife and my mother and my child all this misery. I have nothing to confess. I have told everything there is to tell."

Hauptmann was pacing his cell when the interview began. All day there have filtered out from the jail reports that he was sagging in body and spirit after the verdict was brought in last night.

But tonight he seemed to be the same man as the one who sat same man who sat through the trial. His face had the same prison pallor and his eyes the same stare.

His lawyers visited him twice today.

Asks Aid of Friends.

"If I have any friends," Hauptmann said. "I wish they would come forward now. Mr. Fisher and my lawyers are starting a defense fund. We need the money."

"What do you think about the appeal?" he was asked.

"I am hoping my lawyers will be able to make the appeal," Hauptmann replied, lifting one foot and placing it on a bar of the cell. "But I am going to have to depend on the public. I haven't any money."

Hauptmann has no bitterness in his heart for the men who have stood vigil over his cell and guarded him in the courtroom.

"They treated me fine," he said. "Lieut. Allen Smith is a fine man."

Smith is a member of the State police and is in charge of the Hauptmann guards. He has been in court every day, sitting between Hauptmann and his wife.

"Mr. Hovey Low (Hunterdon County deputy sheriff) is one of the nicest fellows I ever met," Hauptmann continued, gazing at the wall.

Worried About Family.

"Tell the truth now. How do you feel?" the prisoner was asked.

"Well, I am not worn out. There is some reaction of course. You can imagine that I have had a little reaction. But I feel all right."

"What worries you most about your predicament here?"

Hauptmann thought for 30 seconds and replied:

"My wife and child."

"And you still insist you are innocent?"

"I do. Just like I said I was on the witness stand. Why, if they

Hitler Agrees To Discussion Of Air Treaty

Berlin, Feb. 14 (AP).—Germany tonight told France and England she would be glad to discuss with them an air pact for western Europe.

At the same time, she showed little interest in suggestions emanating from London that she return to the League of Nations, join the French-sponsored eastern security agreement and adhere to the proposed central European noninterference pact.

The Reich's note—awaited with intense interest during the week that Adolf Hitler, in virtual seclusion, has been pondering his reply to the Anglo-French proposals—was delivered to Sir Eric Phipps, British Ambassador, and Andre Francois-Poncet, the French Ambassador.

The text of the note, it was announced, will not be made public until Saturday.

A foreign office spokesman, however, revealed that very few lines were devoted to the proposals for German inclusion in the eastern and central European pacts. The latter, drafted at Rome, is designed to guarantee Austria's independence.

(German officials said yesterday the Reich would not pledge noninterference in Austria unless the

Labor Charges Fund Scandal In Parliament

Jeers Pelt MacDonald but Premier Scores Win on Jobless Bill.

London, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Charges on the floor of the House of Commons tonight of a financial scandal rivaling Taffaire Stavisky in France added to the mounting difficulties threatening to overthrow the National government of Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald.

The House, however, gave the government a sweeping vote of confidence on its unemployment policy, rejecting a Laborite censure motion, 374 to 68.

MacDonald was greeted with jeers from Labor benches on his unemployment policy and finished his speech defending his coalition ministry amid disorderly scenes.

Maj. Harry Nathan, of Bethnal Green, arose during the din and said ominously:

"There are ugly rumors and grave suspicions in the city (London's Wall street). Don't tell the House that it is merely fears of a general election which has affected foreign exchanges.

"Foreigners are selling British Paris on Tuesday (radio) broadcast securities because the wireless from that these commodity speculations involve Britain in a scandal equaling the Stavisky affair in France."

The House was silent after

Mother's Death Brings Inquest

Autopsy Is Performed on Mrs. Loomis; Homicide Squad Investigates.

An inquest will be held in the death of Mrs. Ruth Loomis, 28, of the 1700 block of P street northwest, who died at George Washington University Hospital Tuesday, it was learned yesterday.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald has refused to issue a certificate of death and has performed an autopsy, it was learned. The homicide squad at detective headquarters is investigating the case.

Mrs. Loomis, wife of Charles N. Loomis, entered the hospital February 2. Her child was born February 12, and the woman was pronounced dead shortly afterward. The child is still alive.

Prince of Wales Gouged For Whisky; Vienna Mad

Vienna, Feb. 14 (AP).—Austria's government and Austrians in general were hot under the collar today because the Prince of Wales, outstanding visitor of the Tyrol's winter season, has been charged entirely too much for whisky.

A bottle cost the Prince 70 shillings (almost $14), the official travel bill revealed today, and the governments' indignation took the solid form of more stringent regulations to prevent "gouging." A federal commission is being organized

Fabric Rip Jammed Controls Of Macon, Is Hint at Inquiry

San Francisco, Feb. 14 (AP).—Intimations that a break in the controls, jammed by a piece of torn fabric, might have caused the "bad casualty" which sent the Navy dirigible Macon to destruction, were heard by a naval court of inquiry today.

Lieut. Comdr. Herbert V. Wiley, captain of the Macon, testified fabric on the ship loosened whenever it became wet and that the Macon had passed through several rain storms last Monday.

Later Lieut. Comdr. Jesse L. Kenworthy, second in command, declared he felt a jolt, as from a severe gust of wind. Seconds later, he said, they were informed the gas cell in the stern had burst and the tail was collapsing.

Kenworthy said the gust of wind was not different from those encountered before. He added: "Such gusts are encountered frequently in all flying. They are not dangerous, but necessitate caution so as not to lose altitude or directional control."

Wiley, who earlier had testified he had felt no severe wind at the time, then asked Kenworthy if a casualty to the controls might not have caused the ship to veer suddenly, giving the impression of a gust of wind.

"Yes, that would be the effect of the controls being carried away," Kenworthy said.

"If a piece of fabric had caught in the controls, would that have veered the ship and caused the feeling of a jolt?" Wiley asked.

"That would be the effect," Kenworthy said.

The hearing, attempting to learn the cause of the wreck, adjourned until tomorrow, when several officers and men who were in the stern when the crash occurred will be called to testify.

The Macon's young, but gray-

The Hauptmann Verdict

To clear any confusion in the minds of The Post's readers, here is exactly what happened Wednesday night regarding the verdict in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann:

At 10:30 o'clock the first report of a jury verdict came over the wires of the Associated Press with the news that Hauptmann was guilty, with life imprisonment recommended.

A few minutes later, The Post went to press carrying this news. Other important newspapers over the country did likewise. At 10:41 o'clock, the Associated Press killed its first report.

Post presses were stopped immediately, and the edition destroyed. No copies were released for sale. Any copies of this edition which left the premises of The Post did so contrary to the orders of those in charge and without their knowledge.

At 10:45 p. m., the United Press flashed: "HAUPTMANN GUILTY, MUST DIE." And at 10:48 p. m., the Associated Press corrected its first bulletin with: "HAUPTMANN GETS DEATH SENTENCE."

At 10:57 p. m., The Post was on sale on the streets with a verdict "extra" for the first time. The headlines read: "HAUPTMANN GUILTY; JURY DECREES DEATH."

Cutten May Open Court Fight On 2-Year Grain-Trading Ban

(Associated Press.)

An attorney's blast yesterday against the order which barred Arthur W. Cutten, called "the biggest speculator in history," from trading on the grain marts for two years was taken as indication here that the courts must pass on the Federal disbarment ukase.

Cutten, a legendary figure in La Salle street, Chicago, because of his grain deals, was judged guilty yesterday by the Grain Futures Commission, headed by Secretary Wallace, of concealing his trades. The two-year suspension followed.

In Chicago, Cutten, mild-mannered, retiring, was quoted at first as saying:

"I won't do anything."

His lawyer, Orville J. Taylor, however, in a formal statement termed the disbarment "outrageous" and said that if "the ends of justice are to be served it will only be at the hands of the courts."

But Taylor said it had not been decided whether Cutten would appeal the ruling.

Secretary Roper and Attorney General Cummings, other members of the commission, concurred in the decision refusing Cutten the right to trade at any American grain futures market.

In 1931 the Government, through the then Secretary Hyde, was begging Cutten to desist from "bear raids" in the public interest. Some of the 1931 deals figured in the charges against the speculator, but proceedings against him did not begin until the Roosevelt Administration.

Last November the commission ordered Adrian Ettinger and Ewing W. Brand, of Cleveland, barred from grain dealing for six months, the first such action since the grain futures act was passed in 1922.

Now pending is a third case against Thomas M. Howell, like

Morro Burning Still a Mystery To Its Builder

(Associated Press.)

The Senate Munitions Committee yesterday digressed from the story of profits in constructing Navy cruisers to hear the builder of the tragedy ship, the Morro Castle, assert he did not yet understand how the liner could have burned.

Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Building & Dry Dock Co., also said he was "amazed" that his company had made $5,601,851, a 35 per cent profit, on two cruisers in 1927. Then in a sort of "aside" conversation with the committee, he made known that his concern also built the Morro Castle.

"I can not understand it," he said, speaking of the disaster off the New Jersey coast that cost more than a hundred lives.

Origin of Fire.

"The fire started in what is usually the safest place," he said.

"It was bulkheaded with a two-compartment bulkhead and provided with the most elaborate fire protection and fire-fighting equipment," he continued.

"She was built in accordance with the terms of that convention," he said, answering a question as to whether the Morro Castle disaster might have been averted if the ship conformed to reqiurements of the 1929 "Safety at Sea" convention in London.

"The division of the ship was such," he said, "that it would remain afloat even though two of its several compartments were stove in.

"It was designed by Thomas E. Ferris. He had designed more seagoing ships than any other man in this country or in any other."

Company's Contract.

The company contracted for the ship in 1928 and completed it in August, 1930, at a cost of $4,350,000.

Ferguson said his company also built the Mohawk, which recently sank after a collision while under Ward Line management, which also operated the Morro Castle.

The story of the Morro Castle grew out of a committee disclosure that it was one of the ships undertaken by the company in the 1928-1930 period. During this period the Newport News company and two others obtained almost an equal division of approximately $100,000,000 worth of marine building financed in some part by the United States Shipping Board.

Committee evidence was that the Newport News company contracted for $33,075,000, the New York Shipbuilding Corporation for $31,700,000, and the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co. for $33,177,000.

Expected Smaller Profit.

Ferguson testified that he expected to make only $1,800,000 off the cruisers built in 1927.

The contract price was $20,960,000 and the net cost was $15,753,457, the witness explained.

"I was amazed we made so much," the shipbuilder declared.

The committee immediately introduced evidence that the company recently had bid $10,500,000 and $11,000,000 on cruisers. Ferguson insisted the net cost was greater because of increased cost of design and equipment and therefore the profit less.

"The cost to the Government, considering the price," Ferguson said, "is much less under present contracts."

Between You and Me

Aha! Those Sly Japanese And Their Plots; White House Imperilled; Cotton Crop.

By Raymond Clapper

ALL of us should be grateful to John Dockweiler, an earnest young member of the House of Representatives from California, for tipping us off about the Japanese.

We are living in a fool's paradise. Representative Dockweiler warned the House Military Committee about it, but he might as well have spoken to vacant air. Members of the committee listened to his revelations with pained expressions. Chairman McSwain appeared so indifferent to the dire fate in store for the country that he even suggested that young Dockweiler was talking out of turn.

It is an alarming situation. Dockweiler comes from Los Angeles and you can't fool him. There are 150 Japanese fishing boats around Los Angeles harbor—that is, they pretend to be fishing boats. But some of them have air tanks—not hot air tanks either—and these tanks could develop sufficient pressure to launch torpedoes. Some of these fishing boats would accommodate small cannon and machine guns. They are manned by 25,000 trained Japanese reserve officers. If we were to have trouble with Japan, Dockweiler warns, an army of 25,000 Japanese soldiers would spring up in California. He is serious about it.

If Congress refuses to arouse itself to the danger, only one thing is left. Dockweiler received 117,850 votes in the last election. They can all be counted upon to rally behind him. Half of these voters are men. A quarter of them must be of military age. Let 25,000 Dockweiler Minute Men in the City of Angels arm themselves with golf clubs and make divots out of the First Japanese Expeditionary Force that comes up over a bunker!

* * * *

The Japanese, as is their custom, have gone about it with amazing slyness.

The District of Columbia Commissioners decided to issue automobile tags to members of the diplomatic corps identical in appearance with those of regular District tags, except that they bear the word "diplomatic" in small letters above the numbers. The diplomatic numbers begin at one and run up. They were handed out in batches to the various diplomatic groups in the order of seniority, the British license tags starting with No. 1 and running up to No. 18.

The Japanese Embassy fell into the order of seniority exactly in the spot which gave it tags numbered from 98 to 108. The White House tags, which are the regular District tags, run in the same numbers. The President's automobile carries tag No. 100. Some would call it coincidence, but others know better.

It may sound fantastic, but is it not possible that some night when Mr. Roosevelt is fishing in Florida the 25,000 Japanese troops now concealed in California will suddenly break loose and by prearranged signal an automobile bearing license tag No. 100 will swing up to the White House door, loaded with Japanese? The White House police would think it was the President's car and before they knew what had happened, the Japanese embassy staff would have occupied the Executive Mansion. The British did it once.

Rex Tugwell's advice may no longer be eagerly sought around AAA, but he still rates at the White House. He was there yesterday again on pure food legislation, the third time he has been at the White House in the last week. Mr. Roosevelt is consulting with his favorite brain truster on half a dozen subjects. The relationship remains the same as it was some months ago at Warm Springs when Mr. Roosevelt named one of his mules for Tugwell and kept him there throughout, consulting with him on practically every Administration problem.

Preparations are being made to send an expert to Europe to see what can be done about falling cotton exports. The cotton export season is half over and sales abroad are off 40 per cent from last year. In December they were the smallest since 1917.

All sorts of explanations are offered to prove this is not the result of the jacking up of cotton prices through the restriction program. Cotton is selling for more than twice what it was two years ago and foreign production last season was 22 per cent higher than the previous year. If those facts don't dovetail into cause and effect, some one else will have to figure it out.

Lynching Bill Gains Headway Toward Report

(Associated Press.)

An excoriation of lynching in the pungent phrases of H. L. Mencken and other witnesses yesterday caused a Federal measure against the crime to gather momentum which promised the approval of a Senate judiciary sub-committee.

Chairman Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, predicted his group would report the Wagner-Costigan bill after Mencken, Baltimore writer, said no civilized government could "condone such atrocities." Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, asserted that lynchings constitute "almost every type of infamy that blots the record of civilization."

Rewritten from the form proposed last year, the measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from riotous assemblages, and counties where such lawlessness occurs.

No opposition witnesses appeared at the one-day hearing and Van Nuys said the measure probably would be recommended to the full committee soon with possibly some slight changes in phraseology.

Senator Dieterich (Democrat), Illinois, criticized the county liability clause as making it possible to subject Chicago to damages "to indemnify gangland" when a gangster was taken for a ride. Costigan then suggested a modification to make counties liable only where they did not exercise "due diligence" to protect a mob victim.

With a small group of Negro educators and spectators in the committee room nodding approval, Representative Caroline O'Day (Democrat), New York, a native of Savannah, Ga., told of a visit to South Africa where, she said, the impression prevailed that the United States "condoned lynching."

She said a Hindu had written a book on lynching and racketeering in the United States which was a best seller in India.

Others supporting the bill were Representative Ford (Democrat), California, who has introduced it in the House; W. E. Woodward, of the Writers League Against Lynching, and representatives of Howard University, of Washington, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Liquor Dealer's License Revoked

Market Operator Charged With Sunday Sales.

The liquor license of Fred J. Neam, proprietor of the Chastleton Market, in the 1700 block of Seventeenth street northwest, was revoked yesterday by the Liquor Control Board for alleged violations of the board's regulations.

It was alleged that he sold liquor on Sunday, permitted sales to be made by a minor, and failed to have stamps on liquor held in the store for sale. The evidence was presented by Patrolman Joseph D. Loughrin, of the Police Department.

Invitation to Huey Long Is Tabled in Tennessee

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 14 (AP).—A proposal to invite Senator Huey Long to address the Tennessee House of Representatives was sunk by the House today without a murmur being raised in behalf of the "Kingfish."

Brought up in the regular course of business, after having been introduced several days ago, the resolution was tabled on motion of James Havron, Nashville, who explained that "I still think a circus would be better." When the resolution was introduced, Havron wanted the invitation to include a circus.

Elihu Root, Dean of Statesmen, Marks 90th Birthday Today

He will spend the day in his Fifth avenue home, overlooking Central Park, reading the birthday messages that started pouring in tonight.

If the weather is good, there probably will be the customary ride in the park, then a quiet afternoon and evening at home with his children and close friends.

Even with his ninetieth birthday, Mr. Root held to the rule of silence he has imposed on himself and refrained from any discussion of domestic and foreign affairs.

Although his statements have been extremely rare, his interest in political and economic problems has lessened none with the years.

This was exemplified in the recent World Court fight. The former Secretary of State—who advocated such a permanent court of international justice in 1907 when he served in Theodore Roosevelt's Cabinet—kept posted on every development and consulted frequently with leaders of the court proponents.

The Senate vote of rejection was a shock to Mr. Root. For two decades he aided and, in the early days, led the fight. Even though he was 84 at the time, he went to Europe in 1929 as a member of the committee of jurists and evolved the so-called "Root formula"—the diplomatic procedure by which the world powers accepted the Senate's reservations of 1926.

Cut of $6,000,000 In Rail Deal Urged

Report Made on Purchase by Missouri Pacific.

St. Louis, Feb. 14 (AP).—A special master today recommended a $6,000,000 reduction in the price the Missouri Pacific Railroad agreed to pay to another Van Sweringen concern for terminal properties in Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has lent about $23,000,000 to the railroad, had attacked the $20,000,000 transaction as excessive.

Marion C. Early, special master for the Eastern Missouri Federal District Court, found, however, that the contracts were executed in good faith without profit, as explained by O. P. Van Sweringen.

Reporting to Circuit Judge Charles B. Faris, sitting in District Court, Early recommended the contracts be disaffirmed unless the reduction was made. He explained they had become unduly burdensome to the Missouri Pacific because of "conditions which have developed and which could not reasonably have been foreseen."

Court Again Fails To Rule on Gold

Attendance at Sessions Is Reduced.

The Supreme Court adjourned at 4:30 p. m. yesterday without indicating when the gold cases decision could be expected. It meets again today at noon.

An abatement of public interest in the possible imminence of the gold decision was evidenced by smaller attendance in the Supreme Court, the Associated Press says.

Less than a dozen lawyers were present and not more than half of the seats in the public section were occupied.

5 Dealers Charged With Short Weight

Warrants Allege Deficits in Relief Sales.

Five dealers were charged with short weight in sales to persons on relief rolls in warrants issued yesterday in Police Court. The warrants were then turned over to police in the various precincts for service.

Information upon which the warrants were based was given the corporation counsel yesterday by George M. Roberts, District superintendent of weights, measures and markets.

Those who must appear in court to answer the charges are the Square Deal Market, operating a store under the name of the New York Market, in the 1400 block of Seventh street; Charles Lerner, operating a store on M street southwest; Samuel Gevinson, operating a store in the 100 block of E street; Maurice Kay, operator of Kay's Market, in the 100 block of Fourth street southwest, and Ellis Levy, operator of the Washington Meat Market, in the 1500 block of Seventh street.

Landowner Attacks Dixie Tenant System

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 14 (AP).—A widely known east Arkansas landlord today described the cotton country's tenant system as "bad," but declared it would take 100 years to replace it with home ownership.

R. B. Snowden, jr., chairman of the Memphis Chamber of Commerce agricultural committee and a cotton grower of Hughes, Ark., expressed opposition to tenant unions, and said he would advise his tenants "to stay out of them."

Liquor Runner Seized by U. S.

3 Customs Agents Escape Death by Exchange of Hostages.

Boston, Feb. 14 (AP).—A rumrunning vessel, masquerading as a fishing craft, was seized tonight by the collector of customs, Joseph A. Maynard, who said three of his agents had escaped being shanghaied aboard the ship and put to death at sea by armed smugglers only by an exchange of hostages.

When the ship, the Clarence B. Mitchell, was seized at the wharf, Maynard said, she still reeked of the alcohol, the unloading of which three customs men had come upon 24 hours before in the early morning at the Boston fish pier.

"Our customs agents were visiting all wharves, checking up on landings of liquors," the collector related, "when they found themselves in a crowd of 30 to 40 men, taking alcohol off the boat and placing it on trucks.

"They put guns to our men," Maynard continued. "One of our other inspectors, however, had remanied at the head of the dock and had collared one of these fellows.

"The rest of them threatened that if their man was not let go, they'd carry our inspectors to sea and kill them. So the exchange was made. Our man showed good judgment—he was up against a crowd.

"They backed our men right off the wharf with the guns in their backs," Maynard went on, "and put out to sea with the boat."

Plumbing Industry Would Ease Code

For Ending Fair Trade and Marketing Rules.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 14 (AP).—The plumbing industry is ready to throw over the fair trade practices and marketing rules of its code, but will stand by its wage and hours provisions.

R. Kennedy Hansen, secretary of the national code authority, with headquarters in Pittsburgh, said today representatives of the 187 concerns under the code have asked the NRA to end the two sections of the code.

"This action has been taken," Hansen said, "because so many firms have been chiseling by listing one price and selling at another. The little manufacturers and the honest concerns have suffered. The Government has failed to prosecute cases in the courts and the situation has become unbearable."

Cotton 'Envoy' Is Sent Abroad By White House

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Oscar G. Johnston, general manager of the AAA cotton producers' pool and one of the foremost cotton authorities in the country, will leave for Europe next week on a scouting expedition to determine how far foreign cotton producers are willing to cooperate with the United States in stabilizing prices for the fiber.

This was reliably learned yesterday, shortly after Mr. Johnston conferred with President Roosevelt at the White House. The President has been keenly interested in bringing about an international conference of cotton producing countries to adopt an agreement limiting cotton production.

Meanwhile it was indicated that the State Department through its embassies at London and Rio de Janeiro has undertaken to ascertain the attitude of Great Britain and Brazil toward the proposed cotton production agreement. The British have referred the matter to the Indian and Egyptian governments to learn their attitude.

A Scouting Expedition.

The full details of Mr. Johnston's mission have not been revealed. But it is known that it will be in the nature of a scouting expedition on the cotton problem. He will not undertake to sell to foreign mills the approximately 1,500,000 bales of cotton held by the producers' pool, but will seek to improve the American cotton situation generally.

No other problem facing the "new deal" has been so troublesome or caused as much worry as the recent sharp decline in cotton exports. On the solution of the problem depends in great part the future of the South. Radical economic readjustments would be necessary in the South if the United States were driven from the world cotton market.

The President is seriously worried about the situation; the Senate Agricultural Committee has just completed hearings on the problem and the State Department is at work trying to promote a world production agreement. Now Mr. Johnston is going abroad to determine what can be done.

The future cotton program of this Government will depend in large part of his findings. Should other cotton-producing countries refuse to cooperate on limiting production, such as this country is now carrying out under the AAA, the latter policy may be revised.

Export Shrinkage Cited.

In the last four months cotton exports have been running only between 50 and 60 per cent of the ten-year averages for the corresponding months. Thus since August cotton exports were but 60 per cent of the ten-year average and only 55 per cent of the corresponding period in 1933.

On the other hand, the American price of cotton has doubled since the "New Deal" started, while total foreign production last year was 22 per cent larger than in the previous season and 17 per cent higher than the ten-year average.

Still another aspect of the situation is that although American cotton exports from last August to November, inclusive, fell 44 per cent, foreign consumption of American cotton dropped only 21 per cent in that period, indicating that foreign mills had been using up their stocks of the American fiber.

Price disparity between the United States and competitive countries is held to be one cause of the decline in American exports. Another cause is the difficulty exporters have in obtaining necessary foreign exchange. In some quarters the pegging of cotton prices through Government loans has been blamed for decreased exports.

Will Report to Wallace.

Whatever the real cause, Mr. Johnston is expected to find out about it, it is understood, and to report back to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. Mr. Johnston has been the largest cotton planter in Mississippi, managing 50,000 acres. He also is experienced in all the details of cotton exporting and foreign exchange.

He became finance director of the Agricultural Credit Administration early in the "New Deal," later becoming vice president of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Subsequently he was made general manager of the cotton producers' pool, which held at the time 2,500,000 bales of cotton. As a part of acreage reduction rentals, planters were permitted to take an option on this cotton at 8 cents a pound.

More recently Mr. Johnston has been working part-time as a special assistant to Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau in charge of a survey of all commodity and production credits under the Administration's jurisdiction.

Peek-Hull Clash.

An effort by George N. Peek, foreign trade adviser to the President, in December to increase cotton exports brought him into collision with Secretary of State Cordell Hull's reciprocal trade program. Mr. Peek negotiated a cotton barter deal with Germany, but State Department objections caused President Roosevelt definitely to reject it.

Mr. Peek's speeches have indicated a lack of sympathy with some of the fundamental principles of the Hull program. Some of his arguments were answered yesterday by Dr. Herbert Feis, economic adviser of the State Department, in a speech before the graduate students of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Dr. Feis made a detailed defense of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle, which is the axis of the Hull program. He did not mention Mr. Peek's name but at the outset of his speech said he wished to give his personal views regarding "seven mildly controversial comments on international trade." Many of his comments were directed to points previously advanced by Mr. Peek.

The economic adviser insisted that a sustained increase in the country's foreign trade was not possible "unless by slow, moderate and discriminating action, we are willing to modify somewhat the present barriers we impose against the entry of foreign products into this country."

Calls Quotas Defective.

He maintained that quota or quantitative restrictions operated to restrict international trade, even though in very particular cases they may be found necessary, such as the case of Cuban sugar. But he cited the few months experence in 1933-34 with liquor quotas by this country to demonstrate their defectiveness.

Dr. Feis also assailed "economic selectivity" of international trade—discussed in the past by Mr. Peek—as resulting in "distortion" of trade movements. The use of bilateral agreements in this selective process, he held, has curbed trade, and he contended that if this country adopted such a policy the Government would possess "the power vitally to shape the whole of American life" and this country's economic structure would have to be changed substantially.

"It must be remembered," Dr. Feis asserted, "that if our trade is to be of satisfactory dimensions, it will, to a substantial extent, have to consist of a not directly balanced bilateral trade, but of trade which balances itself through the chain of commercial relations including many countries."

House in Japan Votes Huge Sum for Its Army

Tokyo, Feb. 14 (AP).—The House of Representatives, accepting the militarists' dictum that an "international crisis" necessitates record army and navy appropriations, overwhelmingly passed the 1935-36 budget today.

The budget provides for approximately $297,000,000 for military expenditures. The sum, largest in Japanese history, represents approximately 46 per cent of the entire expenditures contemplated for the current fiscal year.

House to Seek Pension Rights For All States

Security Bill Amendments Curbing U. S. Control Seen in Committee.

Sharp opposition by States probably will bring important changes in the Wagner-Lewis economic security bill.

While the House Ways and Means Committee has reached no formal decisions at executive sessions, a majority of the members yesterday were authoritatively reported as on record in favor of greater concessions to financially harassed States in payment of pensions to the needy aged.

An uproar of criticism from State administrations probably will result in committee amendments which would modify the authority sought by Washington executives to withhold funds from those Commonwealths which failed to pass cooperating laws agreeable to Federal officials.

In some quarters it was feared the measure would ban all Federal gratuities to the aged in States unable to pay as high as $15 a month. The committee is expected to remove such protests by adopting an amendment which would require Uncle Sam to match the States on a dollar for dollar basis up to $15 a person. That would mean local Governments unable to grant pensions of more than $5 or $10 would not be cut off from Federal aid.

State Option Possible.

Another prospective amendment would give the States broad latitude in drafting old-age pension legislation, and would call for uniformity with the Wagner-Lewis bill in only such fundamentals as age and residence.

Such a change would give States a free hand if they desired to set a separate scale of pensions for urban and rural residents or for those with large or small families. The localities would be permitted to differentiate between the pensioners in any manner they desired.

Meanwhile, Henry I. Harriman, United States Chamber of Commerce president, told the Senate Finance Committee the Wagner-Lewis bill should be amended to permit the States to set their own standards without interference from Washington.

He urged amendment of the unemployment insurance proposal to require payment of 1 per cent of the 3 per cent pay roll tax by the employe. The witness said such a contribution by the worker would mitigate against improper demands on the fund and help to keep it solvent.

Would Ban Tax Rise.

Harriman's other recommendations on unemployment insurance would:

1. Exclude participation by agricultural workers, domestic servants and casuals.
2. Permit existing private annuities to be continued as a substitute for the public program.
3. Prevent any increase in taxes in the early stages of the program.

The House probably will consider the bill before it is reached on the Senate calendar. While the proposal may be discussed in the lower chamber next week, consideration may be delayed until the following week.

6 Kentucky Officials Accused.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 14 (AP).—Kentucky's military occupation of Clay County yielded a report from Adjt. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt, made public today by Gov. Ruby Laffoon, recommending removal, "under proper showing," of the sheriff and impeachment of five other officials.

Representative Ernest Lundeen and Mrs. Edward S. Bellamy.

Mrs. Bellamy Asks Idle Aided By Passage of Job Insurance

73-Year-Old Widow of Author of "Looking Backward" Makes Appeal for Lundeen Bill Before House Sub-committee; Daughter Also Speaks.

A tiny, soft-spoken woman, Mrs. Edward Bellamy, widow of the man who achieved fame by writing "Looking Backward," looked into the future yesterday and was disappointed.

She unfolded a pessimistic account of the chances of the country's army of jobless in urging the House Labor sub-committee to approve the Lundeen unemployment insurance bill. The 73-year-old witness, who remained standing throughout, spoke in a voice audible all over the caucus room.

After Mrs. Bellamy finished she introduced her daughter, Mrs. Marian Earnshaw, president of the Springfield (Mass.) Bellamy Club, one of numerous organizations throughout the country bearing the author's name. The daughter, slim and attractive, spoke in equally laudable terms of the Lundeen measure.

"It is becoming more and more apparent," Mrs. Bellamy warned, "that the unemployment problem bids fair to become a permanent problem.

"Its causes lie deep in the bedrock of our industrial system and it can never be permanently solved until different arrangments can be worked out which will be in accord with the changing conditions brought about by the machine age.

"Meanwhile, it is our solemn duty to provide for the human needs of those of our countrymen who have been so mercilessly thrown on the dust heap."

Mrs. Bellamy reported the Lundeen bill was by far the best of the various social security measures. She made no direct reference to the Administration - championed Wagner-Lewis bill, which contemplates smaller benefits to the jobless.

"The Lundeen bill," she added, "is the only one which makes adequate provision for all of the millions of men, women and children in this country who, through no fault of their own, are suffering from the inestimable ills arising from the defects in our present unplanned economy."

Mrs. Bellamy referred to the Administration as "the powerful and short-sighted, selfish group who obstruct all humane and decent legislation."

As a parting shot, she said:

"When the fact is universally recognized, as in this bill, that the workers of this country, to whose labor and skill we are indebted for every necessity and comfort of life, shall not only be considered worthy of the care and respect of this Nation, but also, that as a Nation we prosper or fail in direct proportion to their well being, we shall have traveled far toward the solution of our economic problem."

Stalin Keeps Promise To Give Russians Soap

Moscow, Feb. 14 (AP).—Joseph Stalin has kept his promise to give Russians more soap, official production figures show. Figures, released today, placed last year's output at 347,000 tons, an increase of 67 per cent over 1933.

In the spring of 1933 a delegation of collective farmers complained to the Soviet leader that farmers were inadequately stocked with soap, and requested particularly the fragrant kind. It was then Stalin made his promise.

Mitchell Flays Navy, Defends Our Dirigibles

Department's 'Mishandling' Blamed; Zeppelin Aid Recommended.

(Associated Press.)

A defense of the dirigible and excoriation of the Navy Department for mishandling those airships the United States has lost was injected yesterday by Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, retired, into Capital discussion of the Macon plunge.

Mitchell, former assistant chief of the Army Air Corps, pronounced even the decommissioned Los Angeles—lone survivor of four—"perfectly sound right now" and told the House Patents Committee which is inquiring into the recent crash, that "for us to abandon airships would be just a sign of moral decrepitude."

Mitchell said the Shenandoah, which was destroyed in a storm over Ohio in 1925, came to its end because it was sent on an "advertising" junket, over protests of its commander, "to visit county fairs."

Blames the Department.

"It was due absolutely to the culpability of the Navy Department," he declared.

The Akron, which plunged into the Atlantic, was lost, he said, because of "stupidity, nothing else."

Mitchell, who is out of the Army because of differences with the high command over aviation policies, said he did not know what happened to the Macon Tuesday night, but did say "It is silly to try to keep an airship above the fleet all the time when it should maneuver around storms, if it has to go a thousand miles."

"It would be very foolish to give up our airship development," he said, "particularly in view of conditions in the Far East at this time.

"An Easy Target."

"If we continue to disarm we will be an easy target for any Asiatic country that comes along. If we had 50 Zeppelins properly manned and equipped we could go straight to any Asiatic country and destroy it.

"I think the Government should subsidize our American company to cooperate with the German Zeppelin company—superior to anything of the kind in the world, developing a round-the-world service. Then assign experienced officers to work and keep them on it."

"I Have An Opinion."

The commander was cross-examined closely during the afternoon session. Once he approached the vital question of what caused the wreck but then he said he had "no facts although I have an opinion," one of the court members commented "we'll get to that later."

Wiley said 45 knots was the highest wind velocity encountered during the last Macon flight. He asserted the rudders had been "put over rapidly" in practice many times, and no great strain to the ship been noticed. He added that the rudder was "not put over hard" when the casualty occurred.

Lieut. Com. Kenworthy, executive officer and second in the Macon's command, corroborated much of Wiley's testimony.

The Japanese government, through Ambassador Hirosi Saito, yesterday officially expressed to the State Department its regret at the loss of the Navy's airship Macon.

Saito conferred with Secretary Hull and Undersecretary Phillips but told newspapermen he had, in addition to expressing regret at the Macon's loss, discussed only routine questions.

Body Identified As Soldier's

Artillery Private Missing From Ft. Hoyle Since December.

Fort Hoyle, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—The dismembered body of a soldier found in the back woods near Joppa last week was identified positively today as that of Victor Sikorsky, a private in the Sixth Field Artillery here.

Fingerprints taken after the finding of the body were sent by Army authorities to Washington to check against those of Sikorsky on file in the War Department. Confirmation of the identification was received today.

Sikorsky, who enlisted from near Wilkes-Barre, Pa., had been missing without leave from the post here since December 17. A soldier reported that he saw him walking along the Philadelphia highway that day.

A Joppa farmer, Edgar Williams, told State's Attorney D. Paul McNabb that he had fired "into the bushes" when he heard a noise near his farm house one night. The next day Williams found a bloody handkerchief.

Drop in Resources Of Virginia Banks

Richmond, Va., Feb. 14 (AP).—Total resources of 196 incorporated State banks in Virginia showed a decrease of $2,641,184.59 as of December 31, 1934, as compared with figures as of October 17, 1934, a report by State Banking Commissioner M. E. Bristow revealed today.

Total resources of December 31, 1934, were $203,700,366.81, as against $206,141,551.10 for October 17, 1934.

Total deposits in these banks showed a decrease of $3,234,660.10 on December 31, 1934, as compared with $166,347,614.23 on October 17, 1934.

Bristow said the decrease was seasonal, following a steady gain since early last year.

House Inquiry Begun on Macon Disaster

Commander T. L. Gatch, judge advocate, asked Commander Wiley where the greatest strain occurred in executing the "left rudder" operation.

Most of the strain was applied to a point forward of the two helium cells which had collapsed almost at the outset of the trouble, Wiley said.

It was the failure of these cells, in the fern near the elevator fins, that caused the airship to rise at the bow.

Hit Sheet of Clouds.

"Shortly after 5 p. m. we struck a solid sheet of clouds some miles south of Point Sur," said Wiley. "These clouds reached up to 2,000 feet, and under them was a curtain of rain to the ocean's surface.

"Passing through the clouds there was considerable turbulence, however, which caused us to drop from 2,700 feet to 1,700 feet.

"A few minutes later we hit a second mass of rain. It was when I gave the order 'left rudder' that the first vibration hit the ship.

"It seemed to be connected with the elevator wheel or cable. I asked the elevator man if the elevator cable was broken. He replied the wheel had slipped out of his hands.

"I directed him to move the wheel and see if he still had control. He did, and reported he thought he did have control.

"The rudder man eased the rudder and then I again directed 'left rudder.' Immediately the ship assumed a bow-up inclination and ascended finally quite rapidly.

"Within a few seconds a telephone report was received in the control car that No. 1 gas cell was gone. This explained the tail's heaviness and the reason for the inclination.

"I immediatley ordered all ballast dropped aft of amidships. I ordered the engines slowed to decrease the air speed, which was making us rise, and to decrease the strain on the stabilizer surface."

The skipper told how the Macon shot upward despite the efforts to bring it back to an even keel. Soon he received word that the No. 2 gas cell was deflated.

Wiley then told how he directed the crew to cut away the water bags and other paraphernalia and to get ready to drop one of the four airplanes aboard.

"I felt," he said, "that if I could get near an even keel I could control the ship, but the engines wouldn't run at the angle we were. They could get no circulating water.

"We had shot up into the clouds and I couldn't see the surface. I feared we would drift into the high, rough mountains on the shore and decided to land near the cruisers we had seen a few minutes before.

Sends Out S O S.

"I then ordered an S O S sent out."

Wiley said the ship could not steer as she decreased altitude. She fell at the rate of 600 feet a minute at first, but slowed to 300 feet a minute.

"At 1,500 feet we dropped out the last ballast," he continued, "to slow the descent.

"At 800 feet I gave the order to stand by to abandon ship and ordered all out of the control car.

"At 500 feet I noticed the elevator man still at his post, his hands on the wheel. I told him to abandon his post and jump just before we hit.

"I felt the ship hit the water while the control car was about 250 feet in the air. I threw over binoculars an other things and started to perch on the sill of a window when I noticed the ship was swinging to port. I went to the other side to a window.

"Lieut. Comdr. Kenworthy was at the rail and we jumped just as soon as the control car hit the water. I thought I should jump before the car was submerged. I realized there were men in the keels but I had no time to get to them."

The skipper then told how he swam to one of the rubber lifeboats that had been thrown overboard and automatically inflated.

As some of the crew members clambered out of the water into the life-rafts they saw the dirigible's bow sticking out of the water at an angle of 25 to 30 degrees and sinking fast. Several men were clinging to the bow of the doomed craft, others on top of the ship.

Wiley said the men on the top climbed down a long rope, jumped into the water and made for the boats.

Only two failed to escape—Ernest Dailey, the radio operator who had stuck to his apparatus and sent out direction signals, and Florentino Edquiba, Filipino mess boy, who went down in the wreckage.

offered to me I would not accept it," he said.

Gen. Wood, who was at West Point at the same time that Gen. Hugh S. Johnson was a student there, already is a member of the Consumers Board and of the Industrial Advisory Board of NRA. He is one of the military men Gen. Johnson brought into the organization. He served in the Philippine Insurrection, had an important part in construction of the Panama Canal, and was acting quartermaster general during the World War. He has decorations from both the British and French governments and wears a military ribbon in the lapel of his coat.

Hopkins Needs Funds.

Meanwhile, Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, declared he had sufficient money to continue relief activities only until next Tuesday or Wednesday. He said he did not know where he was going to get any more, unless the $4,880,000,000 appropriation is approved by Congress before that time. However, he obtained $50,000,000 from the Public Works Administration last week and, according to Secretary Ickes, there is more available from the same source.

In that connection, a motion to recommit the bill to committee is expected to be introduced in the Senate today, with the recommendation that it be split into two parts, one a bill appropriating $4,000,000,000 for works and the other a bill appropriating $880,000,000 for current needs.

The works bill is expected to be the subject of prolonged discussion in the Senate when it comes up for consideration today. Senator McNary, of Oregon, Republican leader, blocked immediate consideration of the measure yesterday.

Measure Attacked.

Senator Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, opened attack of the measure, declaring that it amounted to giving the President a blank check, and that it was a perversion of the American concept of government. Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, chimed in with:

"This isn't a relief bill. This is a boodle bill."

Senator Johnson (Republican), California, added his opposition with the statement that he could not "visualize any set of circumstances in which the money can not be used under the measure."

Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado, said he would introduce an amendment limiting the appropriation to $2,880,000,000. This amendment had bene defeated in committee.

While the debate was going on, Hopkins made his monthly report, showing that the number of persons on relief in 142 cities had increased 3 per cent in January, and that expenditures had increased 11 per cent.

The number on relief in Washington increased from 22,301 in December to 22,938 in January, and expenditures increased from $594,000 to $697,949.

Students at CCC 'Stump' Instructors

Members of the 325th Company of the CCC succeeded in "stumping" their instructors at the Indianhead (Md.) camp this week, E. Frankly Griffin, educational adviser, has reported.

When two new classes, one in hygiene and the other in civics, were added to the camp's educational program this week, corps members wanted to know which would give the broadest educational results.

Neither Aristotle nor Prof. John Dewey being at hand to answer, the instructors decided to debate the problem. Hygiene won.

poration, hence, will become the fiscal agent for the Electric Home and Farm Authority, TVA subsidiary, which is flooding the Tennessee Valley with electric appliances. Plans are being made to extend this agency on a Nation-wide scale as part of the New Deal "cheap power" program.

Moffett announced that the FHA has insured $40,000,000 in modernization loans, which now are limited to $2,000. He estimated his organization has generated more than $200,000,000 private loans for home repair.

Title II of the housing act, providing for insurance up to 80 per cent on new construction, will begin producing results within 60 days, he asserted. Besides New York and Ohio, States which, he said, have changed their laws to facilitate this program are Alabama, California, Idaho, Indiana, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, New Jersey, Maine and Michigan.

Other States are expected to fall into line within a short time, Moffett added. The FHA now has on hand applications for insurance on low-cost housing totaling $170,000,000, he said, adding that estimates have placed at 1,500,000 the number of new homes this country needs.

"Needs Experience."

While the FHA was publicly exuding enthusiasm, a different attitude was expressed on Capitol Hill. I. P. Leven, of Cincinnati, secretary of the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, told the House Banking Committee that his group was disappointed.

"Mr. Moffett is laboring under difficulties," he said, "but I don't think Mr. Moffett has gotten, up to this time, the best results he could under this act.

"I don't think he has had the necessary experience—he is primarily an oil man—and he doesn't have around him the men who have the experience. We have tried to give him some advice, but we have not had much success."

Meantime, Congress was informed in the annual report of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a subsidiary, had closed loans amounting to $2,442,000,000 at the end of the year. This represented a jump from $103,000,000 at the end of 1933.

The Administration proposed $1,250,000,000 in new credit to enable the HOLC to continue its saving of homes, but when bills were entered on Capitol Hill they called for $1,500,000,000 extra credit. The original authorization for the HOLC was $3,000,000,000, but present applications will more than exhaust this amount.

On still another front, the Administration is seeking to help real estate. The Administration banking bill now before Congress would permit national banks to accept 20-year amortized loans on real estate up to 75 per cent of the appraised value of the property.

In the foreign field, the Export-Import Bank set-up prepared to announce next week the returns on a questionnaire which asked American exporters the amounts they have in "blocked exchange." As a solution to this problem, officials are working on a scheme whereby the banks would discount notes and bills of exchange, thus placing the burden of collection on the Government.

Richmond Bank Probe Will Continue Today

Firemen's Head Gives Warning On Ad Frauds

Fake Solicitors Sought on Prince Georges Banquet.

Earl Wyvill, president of the Prince Georges County Volunteer Firemen's Association, yesterday warned county business men to be on the lookout for persons illegally soliciting ads for the association's annual banquet.

Wyvill declared police have been seeking secretly to apprehend bogus solicitors, who already have collected $20 and received ad contracts representing large sums of money. It is thought they were expecting to collect in a short time.

The ads were taken, he said, mainly in the vicinity of Cottage City, Md. The banquet will be held at the University of Maryland on March 9. Gov. Harry Nice has been asked as guest of honor. State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer will be toastmaster.

Members of the advisory board of the volunteer fire association, meeting at Capitol Heights Wednesday night, also were asked to warn county firemen.

The board also instructed President Wyvill to arrange a meeting with the board of county commissioners, at which the firemen will ask an increase in their annual appropriation of $14,500.

Wyvill said they would ask for $500 a year for each of the county's ambulances. They also will request a ruling giving, automatically, a new levy for new fire departments entering the association. The association will request $400 for each piece of fire apparatus, a limit of $1,200 to be placed on each company.

The bank will have a minimum capital of $50,000 and a maximum of $100,000.

The Shenandoah National is the first national bank in Virginia to surrender its charter because of Federal restrictions and apply for a State charter. Edgar W. Hauptmann, in First Interview, Appeals for Funds to Fight On were to come into this cell and say to me: 'You can go free if you tell the true story of the kidnaping.' I couldn't do it because I don't know anything about it."

Convicted Man Still Declares He Is Innocent

Wife Visits Cell and Urges Courage; Appeal Plans Are Speeded.

"How do you spend your time in the cell?"

"Walking and reading. I have been smoking some, but not too much. I don't think I am nervous."

Hauptmann was reminded that his trial had received more publicity than any legal case in American history, and he was asked whether he thought that affected the outcome.

Defends His Witnesses.

"No, I don't think it did," he said.

"Do you think the State established the fact that you were over here in New Jersey on the night of the kidnaping?"

He smiled slightly, and then said: "No, they did not. I don't see why the jury didn't believe my witnesses. There were five witnesses, including my wife, who went on the stand and told where I was that night. They were not all friends, either. They are good people. I don't see how the jury could doubt them."

Hauptmann paced a few steps and then came back to the wire screen.

"There is some feeling on the part of the people of the public," he said, "that I am hiding something. That is not true. In a case like this there is no word of honor."

He explained what he meant by "word of honor" was that he was not trying to protect anybody else because "there is nobody to hide."

Laughs at Ladder Charge.

Then the prisoner laughed—the only laugh of the interview. He said he thought the most ridiculous thing in the whole trial was the fact that the State contended he took a board from his own attic to build the ladder used in the kidnaping.

"I got so many boards lying around my garage," he said. "Why should I have to go into the attic?"

Did he approve of all the witnesses summoned to testify in his defense?

"They were bad and good witnesses," Hauptmann said, "and I can't be responsible for all of them. ne were looking for publicity. It ust the same on the State's side ood and bad."

"What do you think of your lawyers?"

Lloyd Fisher, of defense counsel, rned and started to walk away. it Hauptmann motioned for him come back.

"They are okay," Hauptmann said. "All of them. They did all they uld for me."

"Did you take their advice?"

"Yes."

Not Afraid to Die.

"What did you think when Attorney General Wilentz said you were a man who wanted to rule everybody?"

"Well, he puts me in any position he wants to, depending on what suits him."

Hauptmann's voice came out in a whisper.

"You can imagine how I feel. For myself I have no fear. For my wife and child and family, that's all I fear for. Myself, I don't care."

"Are you a religious man?"

He had to stop and think before he answered that question.

"I am probably more religious than people who go to church every Sunday," he said. "I am a friend of Nature. That does not mean I do not go to church. I did go to church."

"What faith was it?"

"I am a Lutheran."

"Do you pray?"

"I do."

Moisture welled up in Hauptmann's eyes, he turned away for a moment and then said:

"Get this right. It isn't since I have been here that I have prayed. I always have prayed. It has been in my heart."

"Do you write letters to anybody while you are here in jail?"

"No; they won't let me. I always tell my wife when she comes in here to visit me to write to my mother."

Hauptmann said the two most emotional things for him during the trial was when his wife testified and when it was brought out that he had sent about $50 a year to his mother. Again the question was put to him as to whether there was any possibility of a confession.

"There is nothing to confess," he repeated. "I am not afraid. I guess you would feel the same as I do if your conscience was clear and your heart was clear."

Hauptmann complained that Attorney General Wilentz brought out in the trial only things that were derogatory to him.

"Saved Three Lives."

"When they were searching my life history, they followed only the black spots," he said. "But they didn't investigate and find out that I have saved three lives. On two occasions I saved a person from drowning. Another time a man was sliding down into a quarry 100 feet. I reached down and caught him."

Hauptmann was asked whether the presence of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in court every day had influenced the jury.

"I guess it did," he said. "That is my opinion. Naturally, his presence had an effect. I make an appeal now. If there is any one in the United States who says I did any wrong to them or from whom I ever took a penny in a dishonest way I would like such a person to step forward and say so. And likewise if there's a man or woman who wants to help me now I want them to step forward, too. So many people want to help me, I know."

It was the longest speech he made during the interview, and sounded as though he had been coached and had memorized it.

"Please remember that I am just a human being," Hauptmann said in parting. "The thing that keeps holding me up is my wife and child. And I know I am innocent."

Son Is Ill.

Guards reported Hauptmann got up around 8 a. m. today and ate all the oatmeal, bread and milk that his guards brought him. At lunch he had little appetite, and ate two oranges that Deputy Sheriff Low gave him.

Mrs. Hauptmann left for New York today after visiting her husband. She said she still could not reconcile herself to the thought that Hauptmann had been convicted of murder and kidnaping. Mrs. Hauptmann said her son, Mannfried, was ill and that she had to take care of him. She will return to Flemington later.

Defense counsel announced they would confer with Justice Thomas W. Trenchard early next week regarding an appeal. In any event, Hauptmann probably will not die "in the week beginning March 18, 1935," as the sentence reads. Appeal in murder cases virtually is mandatory in New Jersey and such action constitutes an automatic stay of sentence. The Court of Errors and Appeals does not meet until May, so it is likely that Hauptmann will live at least that long.

Reports that the old dissension had flared again in the ranks of defense counsel broke out today. The hint was that Reilly was about to withdraw from the case on the theory that as a New York lawyer his effectiveness in this case before a New Jersey appellate court would not be great. Fisher and Reilly have disagreed several times in the course of the trial, although they always deny it publicly.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 14 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, shaken by the death sentence pronounced upon him for the Lindbergh baby murder, still cried out "innocent" tonight as his counsel mapped appeal plans and he awaited removal to the death house at Trenton.

His loyal wife, Anna, showing effects of the ordeal of the trial in the little Hunterdon County courthouse, took words of encouragement to him in his cell.

She was permitted to visit him late today for the first time since they heard a jury and a judge decree his fate last night.

"How could anybody," Hauptmann was quoted by his chief counsel, Edward J. Reilly, as telling him today, "believe that I, a father, with a child like Mannfried, could kill anybody else's baby?"

"A miscarriage of justice," Reilly said of the verdict. "Our fight has just begun."

Goes to Prison Tomorrow.

Hauptmann, sentenced by Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard to die during the week of March 18, will be taken to the State prison at Trenton Saturday.

Mrs. Hauptmann left the blond 14-month old Manfried at her lodgings when she visited her husband. Earlier, Sheriff John H. Curtiss had refused permission for a visit, declaring Hauptmann "now is under prison rules." Then he relented, after Hauptmann's counsel requested the privilege.

Mrs. Hauptmann said she will move with the child to a furnished room in Trenton, to be near her husband.

The eight men and four women jurors returned to their families and occupations. For more than six weeks they listened to testimony about the crime, and then huddled into a bare, bleak back room of the ancient courthouse for more than 11 hours yesterday to reach their verdict on five ballots.

"Wants to Forget."

Mrs. May Brelsford, the sole Flemington resident on the jury, refused to amplify her statement. "It was terrible. You can't know how bad it was. I want to forget it." She said "not one of the jurors is going to talk."

Foreman Charles Walton, sr., the first to announce to the tense, hushed courtroom the verdict which caused Hauptmann to sway as he stood between his guards, issued a statement this morning on the part of the jury, which said "* * * they are glad to be released after their confinedment of 43 days. * * * It is well understood we can not give out any news concerning what occurred in the jury room. We now want to retire to our homes and again become ordinary citizens."

It was learned, however, five ballots were taken, conviction agreed upon from the first, but five were opposed to the death penalty on the first poll.

Those voting to send Hauptmann to the chair on that ballot it was ascertained, were Walton, Charles F. Snyder, Mrs. Ethel Stockton, George Voorhees, Mrs. Brelsford, Liscom C. Case and Howard V. Biggs.

Five Opposed Death Penalty.

Holding out for life imprisonment were Mrs. Rosie Pill, Mrs. Verna Snyder, Elmer Smith, Robert Cravatt, and Philip Hockenbury.

The two women switched first to the death penalty, Hockenbury followed. Smith next joined and Cravatt held until the last ballot, it was learned.

It was reported that the argument of Cravatt, the jury bachelor and a CCC camp instructor, was that new information about the case might turn up in a decade.

Mrs. Snyder was ill in the jury room, one source said.

The jurors showed some relief at breakfast that their ordeal was over. For the first time since the trial began the jurors broke up into small groups.

Oden Baggstrom, chief jury constable, said the jurors all were in "excellent condition."

Reilly Is Bitter.

Reilly was bitter over the verdict. He said "the fight to save Hauptmann has just begun. With all the handwriting experts, wood experts and fancy pattern makers introduced by the State, millions of Americans are asking the questions, 'Was Hauptmann in the nursery?' and 'How did he get there?'"

He said he would launch a "Hauptmann Appeal Fund" to finance the battle and would name a bank as trustee.

During the trial, Reilly insisted the defense had no money, declaring out of court the lawyers were meeting the expenses.

In his summation, which the defense did not have an opportunity to answer, Attorney General David T. Wilentz charged that money was "pouring in" from "cranks and idiots and fools, un-Americans all over the country."

With C. Lloyd Fisher and Egbert Rosecrans, his associates, Reilly visited Hauptmann in his cell and emerged to announce Hauptmann "believes that if substantial justice will ever be done in his case, the verdict will be reversed."

"An Honest Mistake."

Reilly expressed an opinion that "a metropolitan jury would not return such a verdict, because they could reason better on the facts."

Fisher, however, who practices in Flemington, said he thought the jury was "mistaken but their mistake is honest."

Reilly again brought in the names of Violet Sharpe, Morrow servant; Isador Fisch, the furrier Hauptmann said gave him $14,600 of the ransom money; Oliver Whateley, Lindbergh butler, and Henry "Red" Johnson, friend of the Lindbergh nurse, Betty Gow.

The florid defense chief said he had named them in court and charged anew "any one of the four could have been more easily convicted of the crime than Hauptmann if the State had moved against them."

Of the four, only Johnson now is alive, in Oslo, Norway.

Lists Reasons for Verdict.

Reilly listed as probable reasons for the verdict:

"The mob psychology ever present in Flemington during the trial; screaming headlines exhibited to the jurors; radio broadcasts on the second floor of the hotel in which the jury was quartered, giving pro-State versions of the case; excitable women in the lobby of the hotel, who would call out to the jury as they passed; and in the final analysis, a powerful charge by the court, emphasizing the prosecution's evidence with more or less slight reference to the defense."

Reilly also criticized the attorney general for "changing several phases of his theory" in the summation.

The defense chief said a new trial first will be sought after an effort to provide sufficient new evidence, and commented he thought a Federal question had been raised in the trial.

"That," he said, "was the introduction as evidence of the notebook in which were written remarks allegedly made by Hauptmann in the Bronx district attorney's office.

"It is the first time I have seen police introduce an unsigned 'statement' by any prisoner. It is contrary to Federal statute," he declared. Reilly has said he would carry the case to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

To Ask Stay of Sentence.

The first defense step would be a request for a stay of the death sentence. An appeal would keep the case in courts for months.

Reilly estimated the cost of the court record, its printing and preparing the case on appeal at $25,000, of which Rosecrans said the State would have to meet a large part.

Meantime, Hunterdon County's young prosecutor, Anthony M. Hauck, jr., threatened to pursue perjury action in the grand jury against four defense witnesses.

The defense witnesses whose testimony would be considered by the grand jury Hauck listed as Mrs. Bertha Hoff, of Corona, Long Island; Louis Kiss, New York painter; Elvert Carlstrom, New York carpenter, and Benjamin Heier, Brooklyn restaurant cashier.

Until Hauptmann's conviction is sustained by higher courts, it appeared unlikely New Jersey would act upon the claims of three men for all or part of the $25,000 reward for information which led to the arrest and conviction.

They spotted the $10 gold note that led to Hauptmann's arrest after he bought gasoline with it last September 15.

The $14,600 ransom money will be returned to Col. Lindbergh after the State is positive it will not need it for further evidence.

Trial Unfair, Sister Of Hauptmann Says

Los Angeles, Feb. 14 (AP).—"I never expected Bruno to get a fair trial in the State of New Jersey," the sister of Bruno Hauptmann declared here today.

"I still believe my brother innocent, and I'll always believe him innocent, no matter what they do to him," said Mrs. Emma Gloeckner. "If he had any connection at all with the Lindbergh kidnaping, he had it unknowingly."

Hauptmann's Mother Appeals To Roosevelt to Save Her Son

(Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.)

Kamenz, Germany, Feb. 14.—Frau Pauline Hauptmann, with undying belief in her son's innocence, sent a pathetic appeal to President Roosevelt tonight to save Bruno Richard Hauptmann from death in the electric chair.

The mother of the man sentenced to die the week of March 18 for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, refused to reveal the contents of her appeal to the Chief Executive for clemency.

Hauptmann's mother learned of the verdict in Flemington, N. J., while making her usual morning purchases at the vegetable stand in the market place in Bruno's home town. She quietly moved through the throng of neighbors bent on her marketing when from the lips of a passerby she heard the news.

She walked with bowed head to the town's newspaper, a block distant, and read the verdict from a bulletin board.

For a moment she stood, staring straight ahead, her faded, red-rimmed blue eyes fixed unseeingly on the words. She seemed unable to realize her son was doomed.

Frau Hauptmann's small, white head bowed slowly as she stood before the board, as if praying. Tears welled from her eyes, rolling down her wrinkled cheeks.

The townspeople remained a short distance away, in respect to her feelings and desire to be alone.

Then the small, broken figure turned and, market net in hand, moved slowly down the hill toward her little cottage.

An attempt to cheer her by reminding her that her son's defense would appeal the sentence brought the reply:

"Ach! We are only poor louts. They can do what they wish with us.

"Lindbergh is rich. Against that my son is unable to do anything, even if he were a hundred times innocent."

WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS

Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes

Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are Nature's chief way of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

Healthy persons pass 3 pints a day thru the bladder which contains nearly 4 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this amount, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is the danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs and so-called "kidney cures" which claim to fix you up in 15 minutes. Your common sense will tell you that this is impossible. Treatments of this nature may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS, the old reliable relief that contains no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

Eastman Seeks U. S. Truck Tax As Aid to Rails

Federal Levy Planned to Establish Parity in Transportation.

Joseph B. Eastman, transportation coordinator, plans to ask Congress to tax commercial vehicles using the highways, it was learned yesterday.

A study of what has been termed the "subsidy" of commercial motor transportation by the Government and by States and counties has been in progress for some time, and is expected to be made public soon. The subsidy theory is based on the fact that vehicles are in effect subsidized by having available the roads on which they operate.

The study has gone into every community in the Nation, classifying Federal, Federal aid, State, county and township roads. It is proposed that commercial vehicles should be taxed for the use of these roads, not only by local and State governments, but by the Federal Government.

Millions in Revenue Forecast.

Receipts from such taxes would be divided among various governmental units on the basis of their relative investment in roads. It is pointed out that there is a precedent for such a division of taxes in the gasoline tax, which is divided among various units, including the Federal Government.

Details of such a tax plan have not been completely worked out, but the revenues are expected to run into many millions of dollars.

Thus far, there has been no serious discussion of taxation of privately owned passenger automobiles, but the proposal would include all forms of commercial vehicles, including common carriers, for-hire trucks and privately owned trucks.

The tax plan would operate in conjuction with the plan of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate commercial vehicles operating in interstate commerce. Bills for such regulation have been introduced in both the House and the Senate. There will be no attempt to regulate intrastate traffic, although some of this traffic moves on highways completely financed by the Government.

In a recent report on transportation legislation, Eastman pointed out:

"Transportation charges have been lowered for many shippers, but these savings are in part only apparent, as diversions of traffic have played a part in holding noncompetitive rail rates on a high level, and the costs borne by the public as a whole may, in the aggregate, be insufficiently met by the payments which the shippers make."

Hopes for Parity.

Eastman's theory is that truck shippers have enjoyed a public subsidy, by having their roads provided for them, that the railroads have not enjoyed, because of their enormous investments in rights of way and roadbeds. The taxation plan would put the truck shippers and the railroads more on a parity.

In another section of his report Eastman estimated that there are 3,249,928 trucks, of which 162,000 are classified as contract or "for hire" vehicles, and 40,512 as common carriers. Of the total number, he estimated, between 800,000 and 900,000 are farm-owned and operated.

Hinting at the forthcoming plan, Eastman said in his report:

"Questions of highway design and highway costs are highly technical. They may better, therefore, be reserved for consideration as a phase of a forthcoming report on the general question of highway costs and their allocation."

Hitler Note Favors Agreement on Air

Austrians were given an opportunity to declare at the ballot boxes whether they want to join Germany or remain independent.)

The question of Germany's return to the League of Nations was not even mentioned in the note, the foreign office spokesman added.

The air pact as foreshadowed in the Anglo-French proposals inevitably appealed most to Nazis, for it implied the end of present restrictions on German armaments.

If the pact is signed, most of the military clauses of the Versailles Treaty would be automatically nullified.

In any case, the spokesman said, Hitler will not agree to participate in a general conference, preferring to negotiate through envoys.

The German reply virtually lifted the air pact from the rest of the London agreement and sought to separate it from the strings the French and English tied to it, such as the "hands off Austria" policy and the Eastern Locarno.

The memorandum also skips other phases of the London plan, the spokesman explained, because "they are being dealt with through separate conversations."

He referred to the query the German government sent Rome and Paris asking whether the Franco-Italian scheme for noninterference in Austria meant that "only Germany was to keep out, while Italy could do as she wished."

Value of Memorials To Congress Raises Query, Halsey Says

The Wisconsin Legislature was informed yesterday that its right to memorialize Congress was indisputable, but the question of whether such memorials were worth the cost remained unanswered.

In reply to a frank request by the Legislature, the Associated Press says, for an expression from Congress of the effect upon it of such memorials, Secretary Edwin A. Halsey of the Senate said he was "unable to say whether the benefit derived from such resolutions is commensurate with the trouble and cost of preparation and transmittal." He said the Senate had made no "definite expression" in the subject.

Cutten Weighs Court Redress In Trading Ban

Silent on Order, However, While Attorney Flays U.S. Officials' Action.

The two men were known on the board as bitter rivals, Cutten operating on the "short" side of the market, while Howell dealt "long." During the Cutten hearing Government attorneys said he was "the biggest speculator in history."

Daily Report Required.

Under the law any grain trader holding wheat futures in excess of 500,000 bushels is required to report his position daily to the grain futures administration.

The complaint filed against Cutten on April 9, 1934, charged him with having sold wheat futures short to the extent of 37,000,000 bushels in 1930 and 36,000,000 bushels in 1931.

It also said his maximum short position in 1930 was 7,525,000 bushels on June 24, and in 1931, 6,770,000 bushels on April 10, being short 79 per cent of the time in 1930 and 89 per cent of the time in 1931, during which his reports were "inaccurate, incorrect and false."

Concealment Charged.

The commission held that Cutten had transacted operations through eight commission firms and 35 accounts to conceal what he was doing.

During 1930, the commissioners said, he did not make any reports although he had commitments on more than 500,000 bushels on 130 days, and in 1931 he stated his position only a few times.

Cutten's purpose "for concealing his position in the market," the commission said, "was to manipulate the price of grain and thereby to make large profits."

Disbarment is effective from March 1, 1935.

Nye, McCarran Request Probe Of NRA 'Abuse'

Borah said yesterday. "An investigation will serve to lay them before the Senate. I for one am opposed to any extension of NRA. If they insist on extending it, there should be important modifying amendments."

The Nye-McCarran resolution enumerated charges of "injustice, oppression and favoritism in the administration of the codes of the various industries," whereas the King resolution, now before a Judiciary subcommittee, charges NRA with "permitting monopolies" and asks strengthening of antitrust laws.

Nye and McCarran, seeking $25,000 to finance their inquiry, argued that "all friends of labor and all well wishers for the success of the industrial recovery program recognize that the correction of abuses is a necessary condition to the success of the program."

Following are a few of the 21 charges set forth in their resolution:

That in some industries the code authorities are dominated by certain elements of the industry, are using their powers for the oppression of other elements, and "to accomplish the centralization of industry."

That "hordes" of paid investigators travel over the country practicing unlawful searches and seizures.

That in some instances administrators have not hesitated to suspend the law for the benefit of "favored" individuals.

"Trivial Demands."

That "possessing vast and extra-legal powers, code authorities have made trivial demands which cannot be ignored, under pain of economic death, and have compelled the accused to travel vast distances with their witnesses and records to remote places to vindicate themselves."

That by means of "the usurped power of fixing production costs, they are indirectly fixing prices to the consumer."

That code authorities "have usurped the legislative function and have issued floods of new legislation under the guise of rules, regulations and interpretations."

That rules and regulations have been deliberately "vague, indefinite and uncertain in order that the codes may mean anything or nothing."

That code authorities have assumed the power of levying taxes on industries, and are enforcing collection by duress.

False Fire Alarms Bring Year in Jail

Man Tells Court HeWanted to "See Engines Run."

Because he wanted to "see the engines run," James Clancy, 40, of the 400 block of Franklin street northeast, went to jail for 360 days yesterday. He was sentenced by Police Court Judge Gus A. Schuldt on two charges of turning in false fire alarms. Clancy, police said, was identified by several witnesses who saw him "pull" a firebox at Second and H streets northeast. Policeman Harry T. Sullivan, of the Twelfth Precinct, said he saw the man turn in another false alarm at Fourth and Bryant streets northeast.

This was Monday, when eight false alarms were sounded in less than an hour. All came from the same vicinity.

Haile Selassie Writes of Plan To Settle Dispute With Italy

Arbitration Through League Council Earnestly Desired, Emperor States; Expresses Regret at Mobilization of Troops by Il Duce.

The following statement from Emperor Haile Selassie I outlines his desire for a border settlement between Italy and Abyssinia through the League of Nations.

By Emperor Haile Selassie I.

(World copyright, 1935, by United Press.)

Addis Ababa, Feb. 14.—I am anxious to carry out the recent Geneva agreement with Italy as quicly as possible.

My interpretation of the agreement is that Ethiopia (Abyssinia) and Italy recommence direct negotiations forthwith, with the sole purpose of arranging prompt arbitration of various matters and disputes.

These include responsibility for the clash at Ualual and the exact position of the Italian-Ethiopian boundary.

It was recognized at Geneva the first essential preliminary would be to fix a neutral zone between the opposing troops. I would welcome an immediate agreement fixing such a zone between Gerlogubi and Ualual, without prejudice to the ultimate decision of the arbitrators on the ownership of Aulual—which we claim is Ethiopian territory.

Order to Troops.

I have been most anxious since this dispute started that no words or actions of mine should in any way aggravate the situation. I ordered withdrawal of all my soldiers from the vicinity of Ualual immediately the clash occurred (January 29), maintaining only an observation post of 300 men at Gerlogubi.

I gave strictest orders to the commandant at Gerlogubi not to send patrols further than 3 kilometers from this post—and I reiterated these orders after the Geneva agreement.

My orders were obeyed implicitly. Allegations that my troops recently attacked or occupied Afdub are without foundation.

Italian Mobilization.

The action of the Italian government in mobilizing troops in Italy as a precautionary measure causes me extreme regret, as it undermines confidence and fails to allay suspicions among my people. But it in no way alters my determination to work steadfastly to secure arbitration.

The league council desired that resumption of direct negotiations with Italy should lead to arbitration and my government desires this, too—and will not be coerced or intimidated into acquiescing to negotiations following any other course.

Addressing them later, Mr. Loman said, "integrity, loyalty and service, for which Scouting stands, are the finest foundations on which any business can be built. The Scouts taking part in the "management" were Melvin Friedman, Henry Pitts, Mac Hatch, Jack Lattimore, Clarence Fernald, William Klaire, Lefton Cobb, Richard Ellinger, Paul Copeland, Ernest Smalling, Fred Waite, Wayne Dorman, John Kimball, Albert Contadi, John Amante, William Woodward, Fred Fernald and Morton Rabineau.

Bill Asks 40-Hour Work Week Of Six Days for Women Here

A bill to restrict the working hours of women in the District to 40 a week, covering not more than six days, was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, upon request of Washington women interested in social welfare.

The measure is drafted to include a variety of women workers exempt under the present law limiting employment by women to 48 hours a week, and it provides for the establishment of administrative machinery which the present act lacks.

A misunderstanding exists in the enforcement of the present law also, according to sponsors of the new bill, in that the corporation counsel's office has ruled that the 48 hours may be spread over seven days and over only six days in different opinions.

Among the women employes who would be brought under the eight-hour law by the Norton bill are office workers, employes of beauty parlors, private switchboard telephone operators and workers in apartment houses, public utilities and amusement houses.

The bill also definitely prevents women from evading the law by working on two jobs with a total number of hours in excess of eight in a sigle day or 40 in a week.

An Hour Law Board set-up with an Hour Law Inspection Bureau for enforcement purposes is provided in the bill. Three members of the board would serve for three years each without pay.

The present eight-hour law is administered by the District Health Department.

The bill provides penalties of from $25 to $75 with an additional provision that the District could recover in civil suits.

Employers are required to keep records of wages paid and hours worked by women and to post legal regulations to show the women employes their rights under the act.

Sauce For The Goose.

Several weeks ago President Roosevelt advised Congress that any expenditures not contemplated in the executive budget should be financed by new taxes. The policy thus established is unquestionably sound. It has been enthusiastically indorsed from many sources. But the Administration has so encroached upon the spirit, if not the letter, of its own dictum as to encourage legitimate wisecracking on Capitol Hill.

Obviously the President is not much concerned about the appropriation of $16,000,000 for the restoration of Federal salaries to their base rates on April 1. Instead of vetoing this bill, to uphold the principle he has enunciated, he merely asks Congress to consider "methods by which Government revenues can be increased to meet this and any other new appropriations which tend to throw the regular budget out of balance." What the President is properly eager to prevent is prepayment of the veterans' bonus and enlargement of the old-age pension burden recommended in his economic security program.

No one familiar with the status of the Treasury and the extravagant demands which are being made upon Congress can fail to approve the President's stand in these particular instances. Yet talk of unbalancing the Federal budget by a $16,000,000 outlay takes on a sarcastic aspect when the President himself is asking Congress for a public works fund of $4,800,000,000, nearly all of which would have to be raised by further borrowing. The President's attitude seems to boil down to this: No loose spending will be tolerated unless it originates in the White House.

The Administration will find it difficult to arouse any enthusiasm for balancing the "regular budget" so long as it maintains an emergency budget into which all sorts of spending projects can be dumped. Congress knows all too well that the so-called emergency budget is not restricted to nonrecurring expenditures. No logical basis for a division of outlays into separate budgets has been worked out by the Administration.

The extraordinary budget is largely a camouflage behind which officials evade some of the embarrassment of deficit financing. Their anxiety in this regard is understandable when the promise to reduce Federal expenditures by 25 per cent is compared with actual performance. Government expenditures this year will be nearly double those of 1932.

New Patron Of Athos.

High on the gray cliffs of Mount Athos, a peninsula jutting down into the north Aegean Sea, the infrequent traveler comes upon the red tile roofs and green-bubble spires of a monastic community which dates back more than a thousand years. Best known for their rigorous exclusion of everything feminine—even to the extent of outlawing cows and hens—these antique cloisters that once housed tens of thousands of monks count now but a bare 2,500. And even that number is dwindling.

With long beards flowing down over dark robes and with unshorn hair tucked up under stove-pipe klobuks, the postulants from Russia, Greece and throughout the Balkans for centuries have here found sanctuary from the discord of the world. When the famous St. Lavra cloister was founded in 963 by Leo VI, Emperor of Byzantium, the already age-old monasteries united under a protos, or president, to form an autonomous republican state. To it many famous Slavs have turned for peace and contemplation. Wine-making and beekeeping have occupied the hours of these monks when they were not concerned with devotions in their gorgeous chapels. A part of their duties also has been to make weekly trips in small boats along the foot of the cliffs to carry food to hermits living in niches high above.

For ten centuries hordes of pilgrims came annually to Athos at Easter time, bearing rich gifts of gold and silver and jewels. But since the war the peninsula has fallen on dark days. The government of Greece has been reluctant to see more of its wealth and man-power swallowed up in this retreat. Moreover, the atheism of the Soviet regime has cut off the income and interest of one-time Holy Russia. Financial difficulties beset the cloisters. Few novices now enter where hundreds reported annually in years past; pilgrimages are outmoded. The war has changed the world.

In these circumstances, the patriarchs are now importuning Sir Basil Zarahoff, supersalesman of Europe's munitions cartel, to underwrite the bankrupt institution. Threatened thus with ultimate extinction, the high priests of this relic of the centuries, discovering that the World War has crushed out their every raison d'etre, are appealing to one of the high priests of that war for succor and sustenance. The picture is not without its irony.

The Trial Is Over.

The curtain has rung down on "the trial of the century" and some reflection upon its significance is in order.

So far as the procedure of justice goes that reflection must be, on the whole, consoling. Bruno Richard Hauptmann received a fair trial. He was tenaciously and ably defended. There was little capitalization of his foreign nationality, his criminal record in Germany, his illegal entry into this country. It does not appear that these extraneous factors weighed with the jury. They faced their serious civic responsibility gravely and soberly, basing their decision on the great weight of impressive evidence unfavorable to the defendant. With that decision, whatever the result of the appeal, there can be little justifiable dissent.

But reflection on this trial would be shallow indeed if it went no further than the smooth working of the machinery of the law. At least two other major factors cry for public consideration. And they are connected factors—the extraordinary interventions of the mob of spectators, and the forces which beat on Bruno Hauptmann between his innocent childhood in Germany and the commission of the fiendish crime for which he stands convicted.

We print on this page today a letter from a thoughtful citizen of Hunterdon County who resents, as well he may, the horrible spectacle of morbidity which has been daily enacted at Flemington during the past six weeks. And there is something deeply disturbing in his suggestion that the jury may have been subtly affected by the psychology of the throngs which day after day, week after week, milled aimlessly around the courthouse.

Whether the intrusion of this many-headed beast actually swayed the decision of the jury can never be known. As we have said, the weight of evidence was tremendously strong in itself. But the spirit of the ever-present crowd unquestionably made itself felt upon the conduct of the trial. The summation of the Attorney General, sadistic in its desire to send the defendant to the torture of electrocution, was attuned not so much to the needs of justice as to the elemental passions of a leaderless mob, not essentially different from those which are responsible for lynchings.

Before this mob, to which he was at best a curious spectacle, at worst a subject for gloating cruelty, stood that enigmatic figure, Bruno Hauptmann. If, as now decided, he is the guilty man, then it might seem that all the ghoulish interest in his fate is something less than appropriate. But to think that is almost to lower the level of the spectators to that of the criminal. Nobody can be interested in the tortured antics of a trapped reptile unless he derives some perverted enjoyment from the scene, and thereby shows some psychological affinity with its feelings.

And this defendant, when all is said and done, is something other than the calculating brute the prosecution called him. There is in Bruno Hauptmann a certain symbolism of a degenerate period of civilization. His early life is cause neither for extenuation nor denunciation. But it is none the less an ineradicable part of this criminal that at 17 he was handling machine guns in action; that his brothers and his father died in the war; that he attained maturity in that baffled, neurotic, hopeless, post-war Germany from which so many terrible manifestations of human abnormality have come.

It was a piece of war wreckage on which the mob at Flemington feasted their eyes. It was wreckage which can be destroyed without any loss to society. But there is no proper place for gloating, there is only room for infinite pity at the stupid, blundering barbarity of the race, in the horrible crime of three years back and the commensurate verdict which has now closed the depressing spectacle at Flemington.

Safe Leadership.

Addressing a group of graduate students at Johns Hopkins University, Herbert Feis, economic adviser to the Department of State, yesterday presented a most thoughtful discussion of the problems that confront the Government in developing international policies designed to expand our foreign trade.

Dr. Feis is well aware that progress must be achieved by "slow, moderate and discriminating action." He does not expect any spectacular expansion of our foreign trade in a world in which nationalism is rampant, currencies unstable and prices and wages rigid instead of responsive to market influences. Nevertheless, he believes that limited concessions, effected by agreement and extended to other countries under the unconditional-most-favored-nation principle, will gradually make present barriers to commercial intercourse surmountable.

Equality of treatment in the legal sense does not, as Dr. Feis fully realizes, necessarily mean economic equality of treatment. But it can provide safeguards against gross and outrageous discrimination. Furthermore, application of the rule of equality is greatly complicated by the new types of control that have taken the place of simple tariff impositions.

The thoroughness with which Dr. Feis has explored his subject and the keen perception of the difficulties encountered in the conduct of reciprocal tariff negotiations can only be appreciated by a study of his address. His exposition of the evils of bilateral bargaining, and the perverse kind of selectivity over imports that results from agreements of this type, is especially illuminating.

If the State Department should fail in its efforts to expand international trade by the methods now being pursued, it will not be because those who guide its policies are overconfident. They are in no sense blind to the difficulties that interfere with normal trading between nations in a world distracted by its successful effort to block the natural evolution of our civilization.

Business Gains.

In view of the many millions of unemployed for whom there are no available positions in private industry, it is easy to overlook the extent to which business activity has improved during recent months.

The rise in the operating rate of the steel industry—once considered a reliable barometer of the state of trade—has been pronounced and sustained for some time. Although there is a slight current recession in activity, the average operating rate is still above 50 per cent, contrasted with an average of only 35 per cent in December.

The latest weekly figures of electric power output show an increase of nearly 7 per cent over the comparable totals of 1934. Carloading figures are likewise favorable, compared with a year ago, largely due to the high rate of operations in steel and heavy coal movements. Department store sales for January are also above the level of 1934, although the seasonal drop from December has been rather pronounced.

Of course general production indices and estimates of employment and pay rolls are necessarily somewhat belated, because of the time required to assemble and analyze the figures. However, the December totals for factory employment of the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed a slight increase from November, running counter to seasonal trends, while pay rolls were over 16 per cent above the totals of December, 1933. Furthermore, the seasonally adjusted indices of industrial production of the Federal Reserve Board rose from 74 per cent of the 1923-1925 level in November to 86 per cent in December.

Ordinarily, such indications of reviving business activity would be viewed with great satisfaction and regarded as an augury of still better times ahead. In the present instance, however, skepticism tends to take the place of the old-time confidence that a business upturn, once began, will prove self-perpetuating. That is because of the imperfect and one-sided character of the recovery, reflected in trade and production indices.

The automobile industry has undoubtedly experienced an extraordinary revival, accounting for a large part of the activity in the steel industry, and it is not expected that any immediate letdown is in prospect. However, the construction industries and the railroads have failed to share in the general improvement. And eventually the buying support for the heavy industries afforded by a seasonal industry like automobile manufacture will fail. Then, too, much of the general trade improvement is attributable to advances in the prices of farm products, due largely to drought and partly to restriction programs accompanied by benefit payments to farmers. Consequently, the improved demand for consumption goods lacks the essential elements of stability and probable permanence.

The mere fact that so much sporadic and localized business activity can develop, despite the large volume of unemployment and its attendant financial burdens, is a cause for some uneasiness. There are dangers in a partial business recovery if it operates to conceal the seriousness of the basic difficulties responsible for chronic unemployment. In a country that possesses the material wealth and the capital to give adequate employment to its citizens, no partial recovery will suffice, even though it proves sufficient to provide for the support of the involuntarily unemployed.

Insurance For Taxicabs.

Strangely enough, one of the strongest arguments in favor of the motorists' financial responsibility bill has come from taxicab operators who set out to oppose it. Spokesmen for taxi interests told the House District Committee that enactment of the bill might drive some of the fly-by-night operators out of business. Even if a hardship upon some individuals, that would be an undisguised achievement so far as the public is concerned.

Taxicabs operate in Washington with an amazing lack of restraint. Although taxis are common carriers in the same category as buses or street cars, the public is given no protection whatever against irresponsible cab drivers. If a person is injured in a District taxi, there is a strong probability that he will have to pay his own doctor bills and otherwise suffer the consequences of the driver's negligence.

The financial responsibility bill, which has been sent to the floor of the House by the District Committee, is an important step toward elimination of irresponsible drivers from the streets. It is really designed, however, to curb accidents among private car operators. More drastic requirements are necessary to safeguard those who ride in taxicabs. A community with a traffic problem like that of Washington can not afford to maintain a system of transportation that is not financially responsible for the accidents it causes.

Enactment of the general responsibility law should be followed, therefore, by reconsideration of the bill requiring compulsory insurance for all taxicab operators, without permitting immunity until their first accident has happened.

Women's Regency.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention and interest were taken by your story in a recent issue of The Post regarding the forthcoming celebration at a church in this city in honor of one of the world's immortals, Miss Susan B. Anthony, the lady who was the feminine and modern counterpart of Moses, leading her sex out of an age-long bondage.

I say this in no spirit of fulsomeness. I should like to state a fact which is practically unknown: Namely, that until the year 1909 women found no direct reference in English law—through ages she was represented by her husband or other male relatives.

I wish for the celebration to invoke the presence of the spirit of the great fighters against this thraldom—long antedating the Americans— among the women of France, Italy and England, particularly that marvelous "Star of Utrecht," the "Seventh Muse" (as she was styled by Balzac), the literary pleader for her sex—Miss Schuman, of the early seventeenth century.

The regency of American women is to the eternal credit of our Miss Anthony and her resistless supporters in the noble and bloodless war for freedom. B. B. J.

A Landlord Speaks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am the owner of an apartment house. Two years ago, when the 15 per cent reduction in salaries became effective, I received a petition from my tenants requesting a 10 per cent reduction in rent, which I gladly granted. Notwithstanding that 10 per cent of the salary reduction was returned during 1934, not one of my tenants has offered to resume paying the original rent. On April 1, their salaries will be 100 per cent and I suppose there will be acrimonious comment if I increase the rents to the 1933 level. No doubt I will be accused of being a rent gouger. Such is gratitude.

Rental legislation affected me during the war, yet my rents then were extremely low, considering the class of accommodations offered. At that time my expenses were very much increased, but did that matter? No, and it will not matter now if the present rental legislation becomes a law.

It is too bad that the conscientious landlord has to be so harassed. In every State of the Union a taxpayer has some redress through his constitutional rights. In the District of Columbia, a taxpayer is the victim of every ill-advised reform, and has to take it. LANDLORD.

What Would Hanna Do?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read in your paper a statement by Mr. Hull, Secretary of State, attacking a group which he termed tariff lobbyist. This was very enlightening to me; for, I did not know that a group of tariff men strong enough to raise their heads in protest existed.

The last words I heard concerning tariff were in a public address by former President Coolidge, when he said that Europe never bought anything from us they did not have to have.

In the recent presidential election I voted for Mr. Roosevelt believing that he would be a better tariff man than Mr. Hoover.

I have always defined reciprocity in this way: a factory with pull will be able to trade or sell its goods in Europe and cause goods to be shipped back here, thereby crippling another factory without pull.

However, let this little band cheer up, for in about six years, when the Democrats have spent this $6,000,000,000 and exhausted the theories of the college professors, a leader will come along with the magnetism of McKinley and the power and force of Mark Hanna. History will once more have been repeated; tariff will again have brought prosperity to the country.

I don't know what McKinley or Dingley would have done in 1932, but if they had had that practical business man, Mark Hanna, with them they would be getting the country out of the red with a tariff wall so high that a sea gull couldn't get in to lay an egg without paying duty. R. C. G.

For Adults, Too.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congratulations on the Parade of Youth.

I think that you have gotten up a splendid publication. It is interesting to adults as well as children, I find. And that two-page spread, "Around the World in News, Science, Exploration and Aviation," has a marvelous scope.

The Mob At Flemington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of our Washington readers has sent to me a clipping from your newspaper of February 10 of the Elderman cartoon, "At the Feet of Justice."

Such criticisms of the conduct of the Hauptmann trial, although justified, are keenly resented by those of us in Hunterdon County who, because of our relations with county officialdom, know intimately the handicaps under which the courts labored during the past two months.

We did not invite the sensation-seeking crowds. We do not, nor will we ever, point with pride to the unfortunate chapter in criminal history which placed the Lindbergh kidnaping on our doorstep. We would much prefer, if that were possible, to have had Col. Lindbergh as one of our happy neighbors. The same morbid idlers who drove him to seek the seclusion of a Hunterdon County home are those who made a circus grounds of Flemington.

There was no necessity for making this trial into anything but a trial for murder. For nearly two centuries the courts and juries of Hunterdon County have been dispensing a just brand of justice without the assistance of milling crowds.

As I write this, the jury is out deliberating the case. Several thousand persons jam the courthouse square. Among them I saw very few faces I recognize as native Hunterdonians, and as a county newspaperman I know a great number of the 34,000 persons who live here.

The crowd is virtually the same that has been roosting in Flemington since the case was moved on January 2. May I say, while I can safely say it before the jury returns with its verdict, that if there is a miscarriage of justice in this case, that crowd will be in a measure responsible?

I have watched that crowd with apprehension because, regardless of what precautions the sheriff may take to prevent meddlers from talking to the jurors as they have walked from the courthouse to their hotel rooms across the street, there is the psychological effect upon the jurors to be considered.

Not permitted to read newspapers or hear the radio reports, the jury was still able to read in the very size of that crowd that the world was hanging upon their decision. Have they been intimidated into believing that their decision must be "popular?" To be sure, they have not been told which verdict would be more "popular," but it has been drilled into them most effectually that they have in their hands a problem more momentous than simply determining the guilt or innocence of the accused.

As many of us now see it, Hunterdon County's mistake was in permitting the State of New Jersey to preempt certain authorities which properly belong with the county officials. When the State made the magnanimous gesture of offering to underwrite the costs of the trial, taking the burden off the county taxpayers' shoulders, it seems to have bought the rights of the county in the case.

However brilliant, high-minded and ethical the attorneys for both the prosecution and the defense may be, they can never be forgiven for having had a hand in issuing fake subpenas to movie actresses, "mink coat witnesses," sons and daughters of the rich, and front page folks to "get them in on" the case and the big news of the day.

Not Interested In Cost

Dr. F. E. Townsend, the 68-year-old Long Beach physician, author of the old age plan that bears his name, gave a perfect illustration of the Utopian psychology in his examination before the House Ways and Means Committee when, in answer to a question, he said he was not interested in the cost of the plan.

The doctor is quite sincere in this—he is the creative artist. He furnishes the wishes and the mere detail of supplying the horses is out of his line. As the doctor is not interested in the cost of the plan, he has shown surprising moderation in holding down his proposed pension to $200 a month. Why not make it $2,000 or better Huey Long's $5,000? Since mathematically they are all equally impossible, it makes little difference which of these figures is proposed.

The Townsends, Sinclairs and Bellamys are all alike when it comes to the ways and means. Bellamy sidestepped all difficulty by describing his Utopia as a going concern. Thus he escaped the embarrassing details of how it got that way.

The Post Impressionist

They Were Friends Of Yours.

(Post Office, Friday.

THE room doesn't exist any more. It was dismantled years ago, and the whole house turned into an apartment-house. Yet the man we know best in the world—who used to be a boy in that house when it was his family's home—this boy the other night reentered that room.

And he wasn't dreaming, either.

The room of those old days was papered in gray, but not much of its walls was visible, because—except where the portraits hung—the wall-space was pretty well covered by huge bookcases with glassed doors. From the shelves behind those doors, the boy chose his first reading.

Or, rather, his first reading chose him.

There were two tall shelves entirely occupied by the famous "Waverly Edition" of Sir Walter. There were many shelves crowded with the Ticknor & Fields "British Poets." The Gilbert & Darley Cooper was there. And there, generally three volumes to a title, stood the Gilbert & Darley "Boz."

An old man, a gallant scholar, used to take down the books and read them to the boy. The boy will never forget a certain morning when the sky was gray, when the snow drifted in the front-yard, when the Susquehanna formed a sheet of ice—and when from one of those green-bound volumes stepped a certain impressive personage.

He was impressive despite undeniable shabbiness. His beaver hat, lifted at his approach, needed ironing. His gaiters showed stains. His enormous collar would have benefited by a trip to the laundry. Nevertheless, the smile that wrinkled beneath his nose warmed the boy's heart, which can still feel the glow of his greeting:

"All that we have is yours . . . and I am confidently expecting something rather important to turn up."

Just so, the other night, Wilkins Micawber stepped from the Gilbert & Darley Dickens onto the modern screen in "David Copperfield."

Nor was Wilkins alone.

That poor lady who would "never desert Mr. Micawber" hadn't deserted him or her perplexing progeny. Behind them lowered the Murdstones. Around were the willing Barkis, child-wife Dora, real wife Agnes Wickfield, the Peggotys—"iridescent" Steerforth, Little Emily, Mrs. Gummage, indomitable Aunt Betsy and oh, the cringing Uriah:

"I am the 'umblest person going, let the other be who he may!" . . .

The Post-Impressionist could almost forgive the absence of Mrs. Heep, quite forgive the absence of Traddles. It was compensated for by the boy David. He made us wonder what we ever saw in Jackie Coogan. . .

Although there are readers of every taste, there are four stages in the life of every reader:

He likes Dickens.

Then he high-hats Dickens with a hat as lofty as Micawber's.

Then he resignedly accepts Dickens.

Then he likes Dickens again.

The friends of your youth are part of your mature being. The very enemies of your youth are part thereof. You may temporarily forget them, but they are always present. Now, Dickens' imagined friends and his imagined enemies were among your friends and enemies in the days that used to be. They were—because they supremely possess those qualities that make for belief. They are more than characters: they have character, to have which is to live, or else they are good caricatures—and a good caricature is more alive, and longer lived, than life.

The transfer of such vital beings from their native pages to the screen is an ultimate test, not of their pages, but of the screen. The Post-Impressionist expected at best a news-reel—feared at worst a mess.

He was doubly disappointed.

Not one offensive liberty has Mr. Hugh Walpole taken with the story or its citizens. And the actors are as much artists as any purely interpretive art can produce.

The result was neither he nor they.

It was Dickens . . .

That is to say, it was Dickens next to the book itself.

Douglas Jerrold thought that Dickens' characters "ought to be included in the census." The Post-Impressionist feels that an annual rereading of at least one of Dickens' novels—and preferably "David Copperfield," "Bleak House," "Martin Chuzzlewit" or "Dombey and Son"—should be imposed by every catechism's "Duty to Your Neighbor."

Nevertheless, if you just now haven't time to reread the novel "David Copperfield"—and haven't the strength of mind to make the time—well, anyhow, you will find that a visit to the screen version is mighty like returning to the town of your youth for Old Home Week.

'Muddling' Will Lead England To Elections

By David Wills.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London.

IT'S an old saying that England muddles through. Wait till your leg is broken, then rub in ointment; wait till your roof leaks, then patch it up. Never touch principles, never uproot society for the sake of a fundamental reform. This is the honest rule-of-thumb by which England is reputed to live; the spirit of the London Times. And to an onlooker present-day politics seem to justify the description.

Less than three and a half years ago the national Government was formed with enthusiasm; today it is more condemned than any government of the present century. It is a conservative government with two Socialists and a scattering of disowned Liberals, yet it is condemned by the Conservatives and defended by its Socialist prime minister!

Thus, Mr. Boothby, Conservative, makes his attack: "Sir Kingsley Wood (postmaster general), obviously believes in and practices constructive expenditure. Mr. Chamberlain (chancellor of the Exchequer), does not. Mr. Runciman (president of the Board of Trade), continues to extol the merits of expanding production and international trade. But Mr. Elliot (minister for agriculture), tells us that the only hope for the future lies in the limitation of production and in economic autarky. And Mr. Baldwin with Mr. Runciman's ardent support informs us that the next election is to be a fight against Socialism."

• • • •

MR. RAMSAY MacDONALD, former Socialist prime minister, now head of the national government, has been defending his regime vigorously of late. He says that the shrinkage of international trade has got to be stopped and offers unilateral trade agreements as the method. This method, says he, may be nearly akin to barter; it may be primitive and it may be temporary in its effects. He doesn't know, but he is going to try it.

Says he, "if I thought the program of the Labor Party would improve your conditions, I would back it. But this is no time to return to party government. As for public works, it was no use getting away from hard facts, and if they were going about in a light-hearted way producing schemes which were not the result of hard thinking and study they could spend public money by millions, and use moral enthusiasm in any measure they cared to apply, but a cure would not be found, and when the work had been done unemployed men and women would be in precisely the same place as when they started to deal with the problem • • • The only way out is through the character built up in such work as that of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A."

And after this fine moral conclusion which pleasantly shelves immediate issues, Mr. Macdonald winds up with a violent attack on the press for misrepresentation of his speeches. To which one newspaper replies that no paper has yet been cruel enough to report his speeches exactly as they are spoken.

• • • •

MR. JIMMY THOMAS, the other ex-Socialist member of the National Government has just completed 25 years as representative of one constituency in the House of Commons. This week there were celebrations. The Labor Party was absent. The presentation was made by the Lord Lieutenant of the County, and Mr. Thomas warned the country that this is no time to return to party politics.

The Labor Party finds itself in a quandary. Many of its members want to discard measures of "theoretical and abstract socialism." They want a strictly practical program which will increase the benefits of the trade-union classes without doing anything fundamental to the structure of society. They have been brought up to talk of planning, but they'd rather muddle when it comes to the point.

Into this arena of confusion enters Mr. Lloyd George with his nonparty "New Deal." Like Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Thomas, Mr. Lloyd George says that this is no time for party politics. But national unity must not be used as an excuse for shirking or complacency, and if it proves that no response can be obtained from those in authority as a national government, then a party struggle is the truest patriotism.

Mr. Lloyd George's motto is "Get Something Done." He paints his opinions in the vivid phrases of a William Jennings Bryan. Thus: "In 1914 the god of war sent the world reeling through the gates of hell. The god of money has since been completing the tragedy."

• • • •

SO far as he has disclosed it, his policy is simple. Peace is the first essential, and for this there must be cooperation with the U. S. A. "I would immediately take steps to reach common agreement with that great country and then act together in a combined endeavor to secure pacification of the world." But restoration of international trade will be a slow process, and in the meantime we must relieve unemployment which at present is over 2,000,000. Three remedies are offered: Destruction of the dictatorship of money, settlement on the land, and public works.

As for the first, Mr. Lloyd George attributes a little too much guilt to financial circles. Surely a great deal of the blame for the present world chaos must be borne by politicians of all parties, by governments and citizens of all countries. But his specific proposal that the Bank of England should be made more representative of industry is reasonable.

Again, Mr. Lloyd George is a little too optimistic as to the number of people who can be settled on the land; it is very unlikely that 1,000,000 unemployed can within any short time become self-supporting by agriculture.

• • • •

IT is his proposals for public works which will receive most support, for, in spite of Messrs. Chamberlain and MacDonald, there are many ways in which emergency employment may properly be provided with gain to the capital equipment of the country.

Mr. Lloyd George's New Deal is the advice of an elder statesman, not the appeal of a political leader, for he renounces all political ambitions, leaves leadership to the young. A short while ago Mr. Baldwin, Mr. MacDonald and Sir John Simon made a similar verbal abdication in favor of the younger politicans at the same time that they lauded their own regime and bid for our continued support. everybody agrees that something ought to be done, but nobody seems to know what to do or when to do it. What your opponents suggest is either no good,' or else you thought of it first. So you follow your nose, and just muddle.

The Once Over

The Garble Sisters.

"Well, I see where they finished that Rudy Vallee trial and definitely identified Fay Webb as the builder of the ladder."

"Yes, but they couldn't prove she had ever known Fisch."

"What was it all about, anyhow?"

"They claimed that Rudy met her outside the cemetery and gave her $100 a week. She knew it was Vallee on account of the fact both pieces of wood matched perfectly."

What did you think of Rudy's alibi that he was on the yeast hour at the time and couldn't remember how much he made?"

"It would have been all right if the radio people hadn't identified his fingerprints on the megaphone and testified that Fay Webb's father used to stop at her house for coffee every morning in a green car."

• • • •

"I'd think Rudy was innocent if it wasn't for the fact he had all that money and earned it himself just by crooning over a national network on the nights in question while Fay was in the bakery in her pajamas and mules."

"Well, anyhow, it's all too deep for me. Let's talk about something else. Did you read where that sandwich man found $42,000 worth of Jim Farley's autographed postage stamps in a snowbank in New York, turned it over to the RFC and was rewarded with an appointment on the Supreme Court bench?"

"No, but I heard that Roosevelt planned to appoint extra members of the court in case the Hauptmann decision went against the Administration in the Russian case."

"The nerve of them Russians!"

"What did they do?"

"They backed out of that plot to bump off Huey Long after taking the oil concessions and everything."

• • • •

Say, it's too bad about Mr. Morgan, ain't it?"

"What's happened to him?"

"He had to sell all his violins on account of the hard times."

"And times may be even harder if Congress fails to do what the President demands."

"What's the President demand?"

"He wants his allowance increased to $2,000,000,000 a week and the custody of the recovery with the understanding that the Republicans can see it once a year."

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Huey And The Father.

ALTHOUGH no close observer expects them to stick it out together, it is apparent that for the time being Huey Long and Father Coughlin have joined hands in a great movement toward something or other. They are to work together, pool their strength and combine their resources.

BARGERON.

A belief that such an alliance had taken place has been prevalent around here for some time. It develops, though, that at the conclusion of the father's radio harangue last Sunday afternoon the announcer said, in effect: "The friends of Father Coughlin will be very glad to know that tonight they will have the opportunity of hearing a very aggressive United States Senator."

This writer's information is that Huey's name was not mentioned, but there is no questioning as to who was meant. Huey was the aggressive United States Senator who appeared that night.

• • • •

This development gives some weight to the story which has been going the rounds for some time. It has to do with Huey's announced pledge to stay on the water wagon. It was considered at first as nothing more than Huey's ballyhoo, and it is recalled that his dismissal of a subordinate several weeks ago for taking a drink was not very convincing.

But recently it has become apparent that Huey really is on the water wagon, and from that have come stories that the pledge was administered by Father Coughlin himself. That they are obviously now working together gives plausibility to the story, because everybody realizes there had to be some extraneous influence to make Huey go on the water wagon.

• • • •

Now it may be that the tie-up has no serious or political purpose. It is not unreasonable to suppose that Father Coughlin simply wanted to add to his cast, or to broaden his entertainment program, so to speak. It will be recalled that Rudy Vallee started off alone as a crooner. Then he got himself an orchestra and subsequently a still bigger orchestra.

This is, in fact, usually the rule of entertainers. All of them realize that they can't go on indefinitely by themselves. The time comes when, although their names are used to draw the crowds, it is the supporting cast that carries the show. It is not unlikely that sooner or later Father Coughlin will want to add other characters to his troupe. He has a wide field to draw from these days. The woods are literally filled with talent. Mr. Townsend must view with considerable envy the father's action in first signing up Huey.

There are many, of course, who insist this firm of Coughlin & Huey is no laughing matter, that it is serious, that it is a political movement the end of which no one can foretell.

It may be that. Both Huey and the father have a way of visualizing big things and talking in a big way. The Presidency admittedly would not be too big for them to shoot at. But if this is what it is there is really no need of worrying. It could not possibly succeed. Both of them can't be President. One must be Vice President or assistant President. They would never agree on which of the two the head man should be.

And what really tickles me about the whole thing is that they were once such good friends of Mr. Roosevelt. Out at Chicago no one beat his breast or did more running around for Mr. Roosevelt than Huey and when the President first came through here after his election en route to Warm Springs, Huey was most warmly received, indeed. "There is my man," Huey said enthusiastically, and a lot of the newspaper boys in turn wrote that at last some one had been found who could handle Huey.

Father Coughlin, too, was singing Mr. Roosevelt's praises about this time. And he came down for a White House visit in the early days. Some time later, when Al Smith with his baloney dollar thrust got under the Administration's skin, they sicked Father Coughlin onto him. Al hasn't been heard from much since.

Could you call the father and Huey the Administration's Frankensteins?

No End Of Books

Poetry of C. Day Lewis Aims To Be As Curative Of Modern Ills As A Medicine Kit.

By Theodore Hall.

AND now, after seeing yesterday the difficulties which confront the poet in the modern world, and his means of expression which would seem to make difficulties in turn for his readers, what is it that he wants to say?

C. Day Lewis speaks for his young English generation in "Collected Poems: 1929-1933": "The poet is, as it were, starting again at the beginning. His starting point, therefore, is love. We shall not begin to understand post-war poetry until we realize that the poet is appealing above all for the creation of a society in which the real and living contact between man and man may again become possible."

Which leads at once to the two themes of the Auden-Spender-Lewis school—an invocation, gently or bitterly, persuasive, to the health, integrity, and central emotional life of the individual, and an appeal of revolutionary fervor for a "new society." This society, says Mr. Lewis, is communistic, and though he is appalled by "the bully and the spy," he yet conceives it as splendid with the full and hoped-for life.

How "literary" that notion may be you must judge for yourself. Mr. Lewis disdains the empty rhetoric, which we find in so much communistic verse, of ill-digested catchideas. Whatever he writes as a believing man, he feels all through him. But first of all he would have us know that he and his fellows are writing poetry.

ON the framework of three long poems, Mr. Lewis hangs up a variety of lyric and argument, exposition and satire, in varying moods and meter. His work seems less compressed and passionate than Spender's, less extravagantly swift-marching than Auden's. It is as if he were content to wait a bit for the slower-footed in the rear.

For this the reader, if he comes afresh to this school of verse, can be grateful. Such a massive piece of work as "Transitional Poem," long and bulky with metaphysical notions, will state clearly its theme of the search for the single mind among confusion, and follow it with a rich array of concrete, image and transferable emotion.

For all its complexity of treatment, it will come out with a cheerful motif dear to some centuries of poets:

"Charabancs shout along the lane
And summer gales bay in the wood
No less superbly because I can't explain
What I have understood.

"Let logic analyze the hive
Wisdom's content to have the honey:
So I'll go bite the crust of things and thrive
While hedgerows still are sunny."

• • • •

The next long poem, "From Feathers to Iron," has for subject his child in the months before its birth. (Mr. Lewis notes with a smile that when it came out the critics overlooked the obvious personal meaning and took it for a deep political allegory.) With such a theme, the modern young poet leaves out all familiar sweetnesses, expresses his emotion with such figures as a trade route, a steamship, or a railroad. The oddity is soon lost to sight in the total effect.

See, for example, how the elation over the child's birth finds its contemporary symbols:

"Now shall the airmen vertically banking
Out of the blue write a new sky sign;
The nine tramp steamers rusting in the estuary
Get up full pressure for the trade revival;
The crusty landlord renew the lease, and everyone
Take a whole holiday in honour of this."

• • • •

BUT the most interesting of the three poems is "The Magnetic Mountain," an impassioned cry for the "new society." Somewhere ahead this mountain, token of ideal life, draws Mr. Lewis, and he cries out to the sick and stodgy of England to follow him. Defendants of the status quo speak up, and the poet shouts them down with a vengeance. Plainly his sharpest effects are in eloquent diatribe:

"Getters, not begetters; gainers, not beginners;
Whiners, no winners; no triers, betrayers;
Who steer by no star, whose moon means nothing.
Daily denying, unable to dig:
At bay in villas from blood relations,
Counters of spoons and content with cushions
They pray for peace, they hand down disaster."

Yet there is a distinct loveliness in his anticipatory vision:

"You who go out alone, on tandem or on pillion,
Down arterial roads riding in April,
Or sad beside lakes where hillslopes are reflected Making fires of leaves, your high hopes fallen:
Cyclists and hikers in company, day excursionists,
Refugees from cursed towns and devastated areas;
Know you seek a new world, a saviour to establish

• • • •

WITH the medicine of clear emotions, with pointers borrowed from psychoanalysis, with the sheer exhortation of a firm, courageous voice, this school of modern poetry is trying to cure the individual of faint-heart, sloth, and torpor. That, if perhaps less conspicuously, has always been one of the aims of poetry.

The new element is the arraignment of society as a whole—not, as satire once had it, the attack upon a part from the basis of an established order. Moreover, society is seen as sick, not wicked. Lewis, Auden and Spender all converge here. But they must have, as poets, a far better curative power over individual hearts (where lies the arena of poetry) than over society. Hanging a sweetly nebulous hammer and sickle up beside their harps is merely pretty.

Temperance And Votes

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

SUSAN BROWNELL ANTHONY was born on February 15, 1820, in Adams, Mass., and of Quaker parentage. For 15 years she taught district country schools; and as was the universal custom, she "boarded round" in the homes of the parents of her pupils.

She became deeply interested in the cause of the prohibition of liquor, and also, observing how little share women had in matters of Government, taxation, law-making, etc., she took up with ardor the cause of votes for women, with which issue her name is chiefly identified.

• • • •

Many believed from 1850 to 1919, that if the women were given the ballot, the liquor traffic could be wholly prohibited; hence one reason why so many prohibitionists were also supporters of woman suffrage.

With Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, she devoted half a century of determined fighting to obtain what she thought were women's rights; in 1852 she had organized the first State Women's Temperance Society. In 1869 the two leaders established the National Woman Suffrage Association.

Susan Anthony insisted that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments gave women the right to vote; accordingly, in the national election of 1872, she voted. She was arrested, and condemned to pay a fine of $100, which was never collected.

• • • •

Some of the more definite things she accomplished for women, and for which her name should be held in honor, were the right for married women to own the money they earned or inherited, a right refused to them by law; and even their control of their children could often be taken away from them, without any good reason.

In the face of continuous obloquy and abuse, she worked to obtain these rights and eventually succeeded. She believed in her cause, was honest and unafraid and tireless.

Like Moses, she never entered the promised land; she died in 1906 and women did not get the vote till later.

He has taught at the University of Virginia, the University of West Virginia, the University of Alabama and at Southwestern.

Dr. Swan is author of a laboratory manual for analytical chemistry and numerous articles in leading scientific journals. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

For the past seven years he has taken part in the activities of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association, and he is a past president of the Dixie Conference.

On January 30 Dr. Swan visited Maj. Gen. Lejeune, superintendent of Virginia Military Institute, inspected the chemistry building and laboratories, and was interviewed by the members of the academic board. Shortly afterward he accepted the headship of the department.

New Deal's Monetary Policy Still Obscure

Is Dollar To Be Managed On Gold Standard Or By Commodity Price Index?

By Elliott Thurston.

WHAT is the New Deal's monetary policy? It is still a mystery. For some time the assumption has been that the President has discarded Prof. Warren's theory that manipulation of gold prices is effective in managing the price level. Similarly it has been taken for granted that Mr. Roosevelt no longer seeks to force the price level back to the 1926 average as measured by the wholesale commodity price index.

That index now stands at 79.1, compared to the 1926 figure of 100, and the low point of 59.6 in March of 1933. Recent policy, all along the line, has indicated that the President is seeking stability and a natural new equilibrium in prices rather than to keep on forcing prices up.

However, these are assumptions, deduced from a variety of New Deal attitudes and acts. There has been no authoritative statement of what monetary policy is to be. Regardless of the Supreme Court's verdict in the gold-clause cases, it is evident that the Administration is not going to undo what has been done—that if the verdict is adverse, other means will be found to reach the same results. Holders of gold-clause Government bonds could be precluded from filing suits to recover before the Court of Claims, for one thing. A constitutional amendment could be initiated, if necessary, for another. But whatever steps might be taken to counteract an unfavorable decision, the result would be the same in the end.

Hence, it is logical to assume that the gold content of the dollar will remain reduced, the Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization found, now being used to offset speculative activities tending to send the dollar up on the exchanges, will remain intact, gold will not again be used for coinage, but will remain locked up in central banks save as withdrawal may be permitted to settle international balances. In other words, what has been done will stand.

• • • •

ALL this, however, is far from telling what is to be done in the future. Two major questions dominate the debate and discussion now raging around the bank bill. One relates to the nature and extent of new credit and currency controls. The other relates to where the controls are to be vested and who is to exercise them. Are private or political authorities, or a combination of both, to be the future managers of credit?

The latter question has received more prominence, though it may well be of lesser importance in the end than the former. In general, the objection raised is that political authorities are far less to be trusted with management than private authorities. Whatever may be said of the failure of private authority to manage the Reserve system successfully before the crash, few will argue that politicians would be more disposed to put on the brakes, to halt excesses, than private authorities. Accordingly, much thought has been expended on trying to set up automatic devices governing policy so that the brakes will be applied when overexpansion threatens and taken off when the opposite trend sets in.

It is just here that the fog is thickest around the New Deal's policy. Prof. Fisher, the Committee for the Nation and numerous allies in and out of Congress are talking about gearing credit management, whether by private or public authority, to the commodity price index as a permanent criterion. They want a form of commodity dollar rather than a gold dollar. That is, they would manage credit and currency by commodity rather than by gold prices. While this is different from manipulating gold content with the idea of keeping the dollar stable against a commodity price index, it still makes the price index the standard. Is the New Deal for that?

• • • •

IF so, it is an extremely important departure. It assumes that gold is more or less permanently outmoded as a fixed base, and that postwar bidding for gold and the other influences which rendered gold an unstable standard will continue. It seeks to find in the commodity price index a more stable standard.

From what has been authoritatively disclosed, as yet there is no way of telling whether the New Deal is headed toward such a new basic standard, with gold playing an incidental role, its price being adjusted to fit the commodity standard instead of being the standard itself. The bank bill seems to imply such a new standard. But if so, is the normal to be the present price index or the 1926 level, or some other level?

Or is the aim to restore an international gold standard, to seek a redistribution of gold so that the supply will be sufficient to back leading currencies and to obviate another era of bidding for gold, and thus establish a renovized or modernized gold standard?

Possibly Senator Glass' sub-committee, in its hearings on the pending banking bill, will be able to get some light on this and related questions of major importance. At present the real aim and direction of policy is far from clear; Mr. Roosevelt's previously stated purposes of achieving a managed currency might envisage either aim, though the implication strongly suggests that domestic policy would be guided by the commodity price index. Until there is more clarity of New Deal policy, it is hard to see how the pending banking legislation can be intelligently considered.

AND NOW THE MACON!—HAVE WE STOOD ENOUGH FOLLY?

The Shenandoah Disaster.

The first feelings inspired by the wreck of the Shenandoah are naturally those of keen regret that so many brave men should have lost their lives. While the nation anxiously awaited news of the navy seaplane that is missing in mid-Pacific it was shocked by this crash, at home, of the Navy's giant dirigible. The costly, handsome and spectacular airship that yesterday started so proudly on its visit to the West lies now a broken thing in an Ohio corn field.

But, after all, what else could have been expected? The history of the dirigible balloon has been a record of failure and death. Governments have spent fortunes on the development of the Zeppelin. They have never removed its inherent weaknesses, for these weaknesses are embedded in the very principle of the lighter than air machine. The dirigible, unlike the plane, is the easy victim of the elements in peace and of the airplane in combat. Most of the aviation experts of Europe realized this during the world war.

America should have learned then, but the temptation to experiment with the big, showy gas bags was too much for Washington. Since the war the government has had many lessons but has not heeded them. It had the lesson in 1919 of the C-5, which was blown to sea and lost. It had the lesson in 1921 of the ZR-2, which the United States bought from Great Britain and which exploded at the mouth of the Humber, killing sixty-two Americans and Englishmen. It had the lesson in 1922 of the Roma, which we bought from Italy and which blew up at Hampton, Virginia, killing thirty-eight. It had the lesson in 1922 of the C-2, which exploded at San Antonio, Texas, injuring seven. It had the lesson in 1923 of the TC-1, which was destroyed by a storm at Dayton, Ohio.

And still the Government went on, spending millions on dirigibles and places to keep them. It was not content with getting the ZR-3, now the Los Angeles, from Germany. It must build a dirigible at home. The Shenandoah was the result. It was planned by the Navy Department and built entirely by Americans from American material. The very latest inventions in metals and fabrics were employed. Special engines, designed by a famous American maker, were installed. Helium, which is fireproof, was used as the supporting gas. Everything that money could buy or American ingenuity offer was put into the Shenandoah.

What could not be put into the Shenandoah was that element of safety which is denied balloons. The bag's hugeness, necessary to lifting power, makes the airship the prey of storm and lightning. In January, 1924, the Shenandoah was torn from its mooring mast at Lakehurst and made the sport of the winds for three hours, returning to its hangar only when the storm abated. After that the Shenandoah seemed to atone for its display of weakness by making a flight to the Pacific coast and back—8,100 miles in eighteen days. This, coupled with the almost coincident flight of the ZR-3 from Germany to America, encouraged here and there the belief that the dirigible had become a dependable instrument.

That brief dream is over. Once more tragedy brings home to the American people and the American Government the hopelessness of expecting from a Zeppelin the reliability, in calm or storm, that the airplane gives. Once more is demonstrated the folly of the Army and the Navy putting into experiments with gas bags the millions of dollars that are sorely needed for the development of the airplane and the hydroplane.

It is a bitter thing that Commander LANSDOWNE and his gallant men should have met this fate, the machine to which they trusted themselves broken like paper in the wind. But the lesson may come home to Washington at last.

The Zeppelin Complex.

It is useless to try to convince men who have the Zeppelin complex. Last week Captain ANTON HEINEN argued to the naval board investigating the collapse of the Shenandoah that the Shenandoah was all right but that the dirigible was improperly handled. Yesterday Rear Admiral MOFFETT told the aircraft committee that the government ought to build another Zeppelin with three times the gas capacity of the Shenandoah.

The history of Zeppelins has shown that they are weak by nature. To float in the air they must be huge in proportion to their weight. The bigger they are the easier targets they are for the fury of a storm. And the bigger they are the harder they fall. The ZR-2, the Roma and the Shenandoah were all big and all three ended in tragedy.

Yet Admiral MOFFETT, who is Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, wants the government to construct the biggest Zeppelin ever—three times as many cubic feet of gas bags as the Shenandoah carried; perhaps three times as many men in the crew.

There is no reason why the United States Government should build or use any more Zeppelins at all. Certainly there is no reason why it should pay five or six million dollars for a super-Zeppelin which, because of its size, will be even more helpless in the wind than its predecessors have been.

Admiral MOFFETT wants the government to be more liberal with its air service, yet he would waste in a dirigible millions of dollars that could be safely and profitably used in the purchase and development of planes—the really useful instrument of the air.

Admiral MOFFETT would like to see more airmen developed, yet he would send some of them up in Zeppelins, probably to die as our men died in the ZR-2, the Roma and the Shenandoah.

The American people realize that it is folly to trust the Zeppelin. The men with the Zeppelin complex refuse to realize it. They are committed to a theory. Death and disaster will not move them.

The Folly of Dirigibles.

Elsewhere on this page is reprinted from the Nation and the Athenæum an article by a distinguished member of the Royal Navy, Lieut.-Commander KENWORTHY, on the folly of dirigible balloons.

The author looks at the Zeppelin from the viewpoint of a Briton, but almost every charge that he makes against it is equally an argument against the use of dirigibles by the American Government.

Commenting on the loss of the Shenandoah, Commander KENWORTHY upholds the contention of THE SUN when he says that "the disaster" was "one inherent to airships themselves, however great the improvement made in them, and however skilled the navigators and crew."

The advocates of a super-Zeppelin, three times as big as the Shenandoah, might well heed KENWORTHY'S declaration that "the larger airships become the more vulnerable they are, not only to opposing heavier than air craft in war, but to the elements."

Commander KENWORTHY'S article is added testimony that the Zeppelin is a dangerous, expensive, helpless, useless thing.

All Dirigibles Frail.

The chief engineer of the naval aircraft factory at Philadelphia, Commander WEYERBACHER, cannot be accused of prejudice against dirigible balloons. He supervised the construction of the Shenandoah. He told the naval court of inquiry the other day that the Shenandoah was built 10 per cent. stronger than the German L-49, after which the American Zeppelin was modeled.

But, said Commander WEYERBACHER, "an airship caught in the center of a storm is doomed; no rigid airship could have survived the storm which wrecked the Shenandoah."

The more testimony is heard the more it becomes plain that the Zeppelin is frail of its very nature. As Lieutenant Commander KENWORTHY of the British Navy wrote recently, the disaster of the Shenandoah "was one inherent to airships themselves, however great the improvement made in them: the larger airships become the more vulnerable they are."

With this knowledge, buttressed as it is by the long record of Zeppelin tragedies, it would be shocking for the government of the United States to invest more lives and money in aircraft that is at the mercy of the elements as well as of the enemy.

Not Worth the Price.

The report of the Naval Court of Inquiry, virtually exonerating everybody of blame for the Shenandoah disaster, was not unexpected. Some criticism, indeed, is leveled at the reduction of the dirigible's gas valves, which was characterized as inadvisable. Those responsible for that, however, are excused on the grounds it was due to an error of judgment, which did not involve negligence or culpability. The report then makes this statement:

> The disaster is part of the price which must inevitably be paid in the development of any new and hazardous art.

It is one thing to be willing to pay a high price for a purpose that is worth accomplishing, but when a country is asked to pay with the lives of able and useful men for a thing of such doubtful value as the dirigible it is an altogether different matter. The dirigible is still undeveloped as a practical instrument either for war or for peace, and conceivably more lives will have to be sacrificed if it is to be improved.

Is the country willing to pay that price? THE SUN believes it is not. It believes that enough experiments have already been paid for in precious blood to prove the dirigible nothing but an expensive plaything.

A machine so unwieldy and cumbersome as to be at the mercy of every gale is not to be depended on for the ordinary requirements of day by day commercial traffic. How much less is it to be depended on in time of war? Unless some understanding could be reached whereby an enemy would agree to suspend all operations during times of storm, when dirigibles would be incapable of attacking, its military usefulness must remain practically negligible.

Even if such an absurd agreement could be made and kept, the dirigible would be handicapped. Futile in bad weather, it would be a shining mark in fair weather for every anti-aircraft gun and every hostile airplane. It can keep the air in war only as airplanes cooperating with it can maintain control of the air, and since the airplanes themselves can perform most of the services intended for the dirigible more quickly, more surely and more safely than balloons can, its scope is limited rather than increased by its natural auxiliaries.

The Shenandoah was not worth the price represented by those brave men who perished on her last journey. Nor does the report of the Naval Court disclose any evidence that lessons to be learned from that disaster can be considered as compensation for them.

Technically the Shenandoah episode is closed. There may be those who will not be pleased with the findings. Whether the report represents the soundest possible judgment, in view of all the evidence, really matters very little. But there is one thing which does matter and that is the question of how soon the country is going to quit squandering lives in the hopeless task of trying to make a useful thing out of a mechanism so repeatedly shown to lack the fundamentals of usefulness.

No More Shenandoahs!

The chief argument advanced by Secretary WILBUR before the House Naval Committee at Washington in favor of building a $6,000,000 dirigible to replace the Shenandoah bears within itself its refutation.

The Secretary said the Navy General Board regards lighter than air craft as still in the experimental stage, doubts their military value and opposes experiments which would curtail construction of needed types of war craft. The board agrees, however, said Mr. WILBUR, that, for experimental purposes, the Shenandoah should be replaced.

If lighter than air craft are still in the experimental stage—and everybody knows they are—it is because there seems to be no reason to suppose they ever will get into any other stage. Over and over again, at heavy cost in money and shocking cost in lives, they have been proved untrustworthy, unsafe, unmanageable in stormy weather. Even the Navy General Board "doubts their military value." That is a doubt most Americans share.

What is the use, then, of spending $6,000,000 for a bigger Shenandoah which may prove no more successful than the original Shenandoah was, but which might carry more men to death than the Shenandoah did if, like its predecessor, it ran afoul of a Midwest storm?

The House Appropriations Committee has recorded public sentiment correctly in its tentative plan to reduce the maintenance cost of the Lakehurst Naval Air Station from $1,716,000 to $128,000. The Navy Department opposes this on the ground that a separate arrangement will have to be made to take care of the Los Angeles. As to this, the country is sure of at least one thing: that is that as long as the Los Angeles remains in storage there is less chance of a new dirigible disaster which may be even worse than that which wrecked the Shenandoah. If the country can get that assurance and at the same time save more than $1,500,000 it should count itself doubly lucky.

And Now the Macon.

The dirigible building program authorized by the Congress in 1926 has been brought to an end by the disaster to the Macon. It has been, in the language of the Soviets, fully liquidated. A little less than two years ago the first unit in that program, the dirigible Akron, was destroyed in a storm over the Atlantic, carrying seventy-three men to their deaths. The loss of the Macon in the Pacific lacked being an equally costly disaster in human lives only because the ships of the navy happened to be close at hand. For that providential arrangement and the fine discipline of Commander WILEY and his crew the nation can be thankful.

After all its experimentation, its expenditures, its stubborn pursuit of a policy abandoned by all the great Powers of the world, the United States is left with the decommissioned Los Angeles, a semi-rigid airship of the type of the J-3, destroyed in the attempt to find survivors of the Akron crash, and a small metal airship. This is a trifling remainder for all the investment of time and man power, for all the fancied gain in experience. The ZR-2, the Roma, the Shenandoah, the Akron, the Macon: call the roll of these great dirigibles, and the answer must be "Lost!" as the British would answer for the R-101 or the French for the Dixmude or the Italians for the Italia. Under varying weather conditions, in different parts of the world, under different commanding officers, these dirigibles have gone alike to destruction, testifying to the fragility of these vast toys.

Perhaps this latest disaster will arouse in members of Congress a determination not to continue longer a plainly demonstrated folly. In its recent report the Federal Aviation Commission recommended that the United States spend more millions for dirigibles, partly for commercial services, partly for naval training. The collapse of the Macon comes as a devastating answer to those recommendations.

Alone in Folly.

Abandonment of airship construction by the British leaves the United States alone among the great Powers committed to the dirigible on a large and costly scale. The Akron, the Navy's $5,000,000 airship, will be ready for her first tests next month. Prime Minister MACDONALD'S announcement in the House of Commons put a period to the airship program entered upon in 1924, which has cost British taxpayers more than $11,000,000 to date. It will cost them between $580,000 and $680,000 a year in the next few years to follow the program of compromise outlined by the Prime Minister. No fresh construction will be started, but the R-100, sister ship of the lost R-101, will be maintained for short flights over the British Isles, and mooring masts in Egypt, Canada and India will be kept in commission.

No such limited bill appears for American taxpayers. The contract price of the Akron was $5,375,000. Her sister ship, the ZRS-5, if built, will cost by contract $2,450,000. The proposed dirigible base in California would cost more than $1,000,000. What it will cost to keep the Akron in commission cannot be told, but it unquestionably will exceed the $500,000 a year that has been spent on the maintenance of the Los Angeles, for the new dirigible is nearly three times the size of the Los Angeles.

The current study of government expenditures will reach the Navy Department in due course. It would be odd if the slight economies expected to arise from elimination of a score of obsolete Army posts were to be more than offset by the cost of our stubborn adherence to an extravagant dirigible program. The Akron is 1927's spilled milk, but it is not too late to save money by abandoning the plan to build her sister ship.

Dirigibles: the Long Roll of Disaster.

The loss of the Akron tragically crowns the folly of 1926, when Congress authorized the construction of two huge dirigibles, which were to be constructed on the theory dear to lighter-than-air advocates that to make these toys safer it is only necessary to build them larger.

Before Congress authorized the construction of the Akron and the Macon the world had witnessed several major disasters to dirigibles. On August 24, 1921, while cruising over the Humber River, the British-built R-38, constructed for the United States and just about to be taken over by the Navy as the ZR-2, broke in two and was destroyed by flames. Sixty-two lives were lost; of these seventeen were those of American naval officers and men.

On February 21, 1922, at Hampton Roads, Virginia, the Roma, Italian built for the United States, was destroyed when broken vertical controls sent the airship nose-down into a high-power electric line. Thirty-four lives were lost in that disaster.

On October 17, 1922, the Army's largest blimp, the C-2, was destroyed at San Antonio by an explosion, which, fortunately, did not injure a single member of the crew.

The French dirigible Dixmude, like many another victim of disaster the largest airship of the moment, was destroyed some time after December 21, 1923 (when she was last sighted), with the loss of her crew of fifty men.

In circumstances, if not in setting, the loss of the Akron was similar to the loss of the Shenandoah, taken into the air on her first flight on September 4, 1923, and destroyed over Caldwell, Ohio, on September 3, 1925. Fourteen lives were lost in that disaster. Only the skill and resourcefulness of members of the crew who free-ballooned a portion of the ship to earth prevented the loss of life from being greater.

Thus the record stood at the time that Congress authorized construction of two more dirigibles at a total cost of $7,825,000. The dirigible was not a novelty. Its history antedates that of the airplane. A Germany at war had spent countless sums of money and innumerable lives in a vain attempt to demonstrate the military usefulness of the dirigible. The British building program entered upon after the war was marked by the scrapping of one dirigible after another until the building of the Los Angeles by Germany for the United States and the Shenandoah of American build provided the impetus for a fresh British program which called for the expenditure of nearly $11,000,000 on the R-100 and the R-101.

In 1926, then, there was no dearth of evidence to show the folly of building dirigibles. All the solid evidence of disaster after disaster was swept away by the specious plea that nobody had yet built dirigibles big enough and strong enough. It was accordingly proposed to build two airships eighty-five feet longer than the ZR-2 and with cubic capacity more than twice as great. The same plea was made in Great Britain and was listened to there as here. The R-100 and the R-101 were to be made bigger, stronger, more powerful, with a higher safety factor than had ever been seen before.

The history of the working out of the theory of bigness is briefly told. The two big British dirigibles were completed in 1929. One of them, the R-101, was destroyed near Beauvais, France, on October 5, 1930, on the first leg of her maiden voyage, with the loss of forty-seven lives. Her sister ship, the R-100, was sold for scrap in 1931.

Construction of the Akron was begun on November 7, 1929. Destruction of the airship followed by only a year and a half her first flight. The theory of bigness so worked out here as to make our biggest dirigible the cause of our biggest disaster.

Representative VINSON, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, is reported as saying, "There won't be any more big airships built." It is to be hoped that he speaks with authority. The new deal that began on March 4 should include a casting out of a monumental folly of the past. Seven years ago THE SUN said:

> Over and over again, at heavy cost in money and shocking cost in lives, they [dirigibles] have been proved untrustworthy, unsafe, unmanageable in stormy weather.

Not a word of that needs to be changed in 1933.

Disastrous Theory.

Representative VINSON'S recommendation to the Federal Aviation Commission that the Navy build two giant dirigibles to replace the Akron and the Los Angeles is a pertinent illustration of the tenacity of the theory that the way to avoid the vulnerability characteristic of dirigibles is to make them larger. So far this policy has only resulted in bringing about greater disasters, in proportion to the increase in the size of the airships.

Though it happened four years ago, the loss of the British dirigible R-101 must still be remembered. That was constructed in accordance with the theory of making dirigibles bigger to make them safer. It crashed on its maiden voyage with the loss of forty-seven lives. The R-101 was eighty-five feet longer than the ZR-2 and had a cubic capacity twice as large, yet its fate was the same.

The Akron, whose destruction occurred only a year and a half ago, was designed to be bigger and safer than the Shenandoah. The Shenandoah broke in two in a Midwestern storm, with the loss of fourteen lives, in 1923. Ten years later the Akron was destroyed with the loss of seventy-three lives in the major catastrophe of the air. The theory of bigness thus led straight to the biggest disaster.

Untaught by the long roll of dirigible disasters, Representative VINSON again comes forward in support of the theory of bigness. Memories must be short indeed if members of Congress do not remember the ZR-2, the Roma, the Shenandoah and the Akron when they are asked to vote millions for two new airships.

Millions for Disaster.

The Federal Aviation Commission, created by the air mail act of June 12, 1934, and required to report its recommendations respecting a broad policy covering all phases of aviation, would like to commit the United States Government to the expenditure of millions for dirigibles, some of them to be used by the Navy, some to be turned over to private operators for use in transatlantic commercial service.

This portion of the report is marked by understatement, as witness the subjoined paragraph:

> While the record of the airship has been marked by a number of disasters as a matter of common knowledge, each of them in turn has been the subject of detailed investigation, and each appears to have been shown, to the satisfaction of unprejudiced judges, to have been due either to errors in navigation or airmanship which were in no way inevitable or to a serious misapprehension of the capacities of the airship.

This is so cautiously worded a statement that it might have been written by that well-known Philadelphia lawyer, but the phrase "a number of disasters" is scarcely adequate as a description of the long roll of disasters, in the most recent of which, the loss of the Akron, seventy-two lives were lost. Zealots for the dirigible have often given the impression that they believe the answer to disaster to be more and bigger dirigibles. The commission repeats this argument, in effect, when it says:

> We regard the arts of airship construction and operation as being still somewhat experimental. The only hope of making further progress is through the construction and operation of airships.

This is approximately the theory behind the construction of the Macon and the Akron in the United States and the building of the R-100 and the R-101 in Great Britain. In both countries it was argued that by building bigger, stronger and more powerful dirigibles the disasters of the past could be avoided. Each country lost one of the dirigibles so built. The only result of the bigger-and-better theory was to make certain that more persons were killed when the bigger and better airships came to grief. Last spring Representative WEARIN calculated that the United States has spent $100,000,000 on the development, construction and operation of airships. What has been learned or gained of military or commercial value that could not have been obtained by the expenditure of a quarter or a half of the money on airplanes? And why should not private capital be left to blaze the trail in transatlantic dirigible service?

The Sun

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1935.

Folly's Own Disaster.

Official investigation of the loss of the dirigible Macon ought to be facilitated by survival of eighty-one of the eighty-three persons on board the airship when her stern crumpled and she fell to the surface of the Pacific. Yet it is possible that the whole eighty-one will be able to give no clearer explanation of the cause of the disaster than was contained in Commander WILEY'S immediate report, in which he says that "a casualty occurred in the stern," after which one gas cell was lost, the stern crumpled, another gas cell was lost and the ship landed stern first. The observations of the lighthouse keeper at Point Sur, who watched the Macon almost up to the moment she fell, indicate that there was a rain squall just before the ship fell, but they also indicate that the velocity of the wind on the surface was no more than three miles an hour and that there was not a heavy sea. Naval vessels picked up the survivors without difficulty, further evidence that there was little wind or sea.

The Shenandoah was destroyed by a corn-belt thunderstorm and her great bulk was torn into three pieces. The Akron was crushed by a storm on the Atlantic. The French dirigible Dixmude was lost in a Mediterranean storm. The British dirigible R-101 was driven to French earth by a fierce rainstorm and there destroyed. There were storm conditions prior to the Macon's destruction, but apparently not at the moment of the accident. The variety of the circumstances which accompanied these dirigible disasters suggests strongly that it is not merely one type of bad weather that is dangerous to dirigibles. No; the plain evidence is that they are fair-weather creatures, ever in danger when they attempt to run through bad weather of any description.

The loss of the Macon closes the chapter begun in 1926, when Congress authorized the construction of the Akron and the Macon at a cost of $7,825,000. The construction of the dirigible base at Sunnyvale, California, added more millions to the cost of the program, undertaken in spite of the plain warning given by the loss of the ZR-2, the Roma and the Shenandoah, and by the abandonment of the dirigible by all other great Powers.

The Akron was destroyed on April 4, 1933, with the loss of seventy-three lives, less than a year after it had been pronounced by the House Naval Affairs Committee to be flawless. Before her destruction the Akron suffered three minor accidents in 1932. The Macon survived her sister ship less than two years. But for the immediate presence of naval vessels the death list would have been as large as the Akron's.

The end of this disastrous chapter should not be accepted as an excuse by Congress to listen to another plea to build bigger, more costly dirigibles on the theory that mere size means safety. That theory has been well examined and has been found wanting.

The President has plainly indicated that he will not ask Congress for funds to build more dirigibles. Let Congress accept the facts as honestly.

Former Chums Trace Slaying To Kennamer

State Rests Its Case Against Son of Federal Judge in Oklahoma.

Pawnee, Okla., Feb. 14 (AP).—Accusing fingers of former friends tonight ringed Phil Kennamer, son of a Federal jurist, as the State ended its murder case against him.

Two former friends and a casual acquaintance have told of the 19-year-old Kennamer's fury against John F. Gorrell, jr., 23, whom he has admitted killing, and of his plan—announced, they said, days before Gorrell was found shot to death—to kill the Kansas City dental student because he allegedly planned to harm Miss Virginia Wilcox, 19.

Relentlessly today Tulsa County Prosecutor Holly Anderson battered at the self-defense plea and at the defense contention of temporary insanity.

Jack Snedden, a former friend of the dapper defendant, and Crandall "Beebe" Morton, wealthy Indian youth, testified Kennamer set the mark of death on Gorrell before he died. Floyd Huff, Kansas City aviator, who knew Kennamer only during an automobile drive from Kansas City to Tulsa, testified yesterday that Kennamer said he planned to kill Gorrell a week before his death.

All agreed the alleged motive was the same—that Kennamer told them Gorrell had conceived an extortion plot against the family of Homer F. Wilcox in which Miss Wilcox, daughter of the wealthy Tulsa oilman, was to be one of the victims.

Snedden was first on the stand today to tell of wresting, with Morton, a knife from Kennamer the night of the slaying. He told of seeing a note which Kennamer said was the extortion note he was supposed to mail the Wilcox family.

Dunn, Berlin On Train Bound For Alcatraz

Last of Tri-State Gang, Two Others Transferred From Lorton.

Two convicted bandits—John (Slim) Dunn and Sam Berlin—last remnants of the notorious "tri-State" gang, were among a shipment of four "unruly" prisoners who left Lorton Reformatory early yesterday for Alcatraz, penal stronghold in San Francisco Bay.

In custody of Capt. M. M. Barnard, superintendent of District penal institutions, and five guards, the prisoners left by train shortly before 1 a. m. Two other former Lorton inmates were scheduled to join the group in Fort Wayne, Ind.

The transfer, it was learned, was made as a "precautionary" measure. Several suspected "trouble makers" have been sent to Uncle Sam's escape-proof island prison in recent months.

Besides the "tri-State" prisoners, others in the shipment were Milton E. Terry, under life sentence for the murder and robbery of George Francisco, reputed "numbers" operator, in 1933, and George Davis, serving from 6 to 10 years for housebreaking and larceny.

James Vessila and John Carroll, removed from Lorton to the penitentiary at Milan, Mich., following a threatened uprising last August, will be picked up in Fort Wayne for transfer to Alcatraz.

Berlin and Dunn were convicted last November for the holdup and robbery of Heurich's brewery. They were sentenced to serve from 3 to six years. They were convicted largely on the testimony of Arthur (Dutch) Misunas, "tri-State" gangster, who furnished evidence which aided in sending Walter Legenza and Robert Mais to the electric chair at Richmond several weeks ago.

900 More, Freed From Quarantine

300 Remain in Transient Lodges Under Ban.

The quarantine of transients because of an outbreak of spinal meningitis cases subsequently develop when an additional 900 men were released, bringing the total liberated to 1,400.

Decision to lift the restriction was made at a conference attended by Acting Health Officer Edward J. Schwartz, Dr. James Cumming, his assistant; Richard W. Gebhardt, director of the Transient Bureau, and a few other officials.

"If, however, any epidemic meningitis cases subsequently develops in any of the lodges released from the quarantine, the restriction will be immediately reimposed," Dr. Schwartz announced.

The lodges still under quarantine house about 300 men.

Children Wade Mud to Class, Arlington Told

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Declaring that road conditions as a result of installation of sewers in Barcroft, Arlington and Penrose are such that the fire departments are unable to reach homes, Arthur C. Stickley 2d, appearing before the board at its meeting yesterday, demanded immediate repairs.

He added that on many of the roads children attending the Arlington School have to wade through deep mud.

J. H. Campbell, resident engineer for the J. N. Chester Engineers, in charge of the sewer installation, declared that letters have gone to all contractors stating that unless they put the roads back in shape the county will do it and deduct the cost from their contracts.

The board then ordered that fire lanes be provided as follows: Barcroft section—High terrace from Columbia pike to Prescott street, Prescott street to Spring avenue, to Brook avenue, to Arlington avenue, to Columbia pike. Alcova Heights section — Deepwood avenue from Glebe road to Axalia street, Virginia street from Columbia pike to Alcova avenue, then right to Bingham road. Penrose section—Schley avenue from Columbia pike to Ahelly road, Lee avenue from Columbia pike to Shelly road.

Stickley asserted that it appeared that all the contracts favored the contractor, with little or no consideration for the public.

The board voted that persons desiring to connect their home with the county sewerage system be required to pay $1.25 for each front foot and to agree to pay any additional charge that may later be determined upon by the board.

Chairman B. M. Smith announced a special board meeting will be held soon when the ordinance which Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas will draw governing the front-foot charge, will be acted upon.

An effort to have the board include an item covering the cost of the construction of the Washington street approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge was made by Robert E. Plymale, of the Rosslyn Precinct Civic League, who said the plan has the approval of all business men and civic organizations in the county.

The entire right of way, 50 feet in length, was given the county more than four years ago upon promise that the road would be built, but only a section from the Military road to the Georgetown pike has been completed, he said.

The proposal was continued for further consideration.

Crime Prober Compiles List Of Witnesses

House Committee to Open Hearings on Conditions Here Monday.

Plans for a searching inquiry into crime conditions and the functioning of District law enforcement machinery began taking shape yesterday as John R. Fitzpatrick, counsel of the House District Crime Committee, compiled a tentative list of witnesses to be called before the committee for examination beginning Monday morning.

The first witness has not been determinate, Mr. Fitzpatrcik said. When he has completed his study of the records of hearings already held, he will consult members of the committee and lay before them a program of procedure for their approval, it was said.

"The committee obtained the services of Mr. Fitzpatrick to make certain there would be a logical development of information necessary to a sound report not only on crime conditions, but to a sound program of remedial legislation, if any additional legislation is required," Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman, said.

"The committee does not seek to pillory anyone on hearsay evidence and loose charges and inferences," Mr. Randolph added. "We expect our hearings to develop facts of importance during the next week."

Scout Leaders Meet Monday On Rally Plans

Dr. Stanley, 19 Division Heads to Confer on Jamboree.

District commissioners of the 19 divisions of the District of Columbia Council will meet Monday evening, February 18 at the home of the new commissioner, Dr. Camp Stanley, 2370 Massachusetts avenue northwest at 8 p. m. At this meeting the suggested participation of the District of Columbia Council in the national jamboree will be discussed and action taken.

The local celebration of the silver anniversary week closed Wednesday with a series of community good turns and father and son banquets in the evening. Participation in the various events of the week by scouts of Washington and nearby Maryland and Virginia was the greatest numerically ever recorded in the council. With this as a background, scouts are now directing their attention to the further celebration of the jubilee here by the national jamboree to be held in Washington in August.

In preparation for the national jamboree, organization of new scout troops, cub packs, and sea scout units is going ahead at top speed.

Training courses also are being set up to instruct leaders for these new groups. One course is being conducted at the local training center, 1018 Vermont avenue, each Monday evening.

Another course was started Thursday night at Fairfax, Va., for leaders in Fairfax County.

Harold E. Earp, scoutmaster of Troop 28, Red Cross first-aid instructor, is giving a short practical first-aid course for scouts of the Capital division covering at least second-class requirements. This course will be held at the Lincoln Road Methodist Episcopal Church, Lincoln road and U streets, northeast, and will continue for at least four sessions.

The Sea Scout rating board meeting that was to have been held next Tuesday has been postponed to Tuesday, February 26. The board will meet at the Training Center, 1018 Vermont avenue.

The District of Columbia Eagle Scout Association has been asked by their president, Richard Miller, to assemble at Boy Scout headquarters Tuesday evening, February 19, to discuss participation in the jamboree.

Through the courtesy of the Metropolitan Theater, Scouts are invited to see the current attraction. Uniforms are required for admission. Report at Franklin Square, Thirteenth and I streets, at 10:30 a. m. Saturday. If the weather is bad go directly to the theater.

Troop 14's debating team, under the leadership of George Towberman, captain, and Alvin Toberman, of the George Washington University debating team, instructor, is now organized and ready for debate. About 15 Scouts are on the team and their objective, in addition to a good time, is the public speaking merit badge. This venture is one of a series of activities planned by Scoutmaster Cronenburg in the troop program of 1935.

Troop 79 reports a squirrel story. A squirrel, which was imprisoned in their meeting place for several days, in attempting to get out, chewed the window frames of every window, and according to one of the Scouts, if he had chewed in one place could have gotten out several times over.

New buses will be at the Zemo Mile Stone for Scouts at 10:30 a. m. February 22 for the annual pilgrimage to the Tomb of Washington. It is requested that all those having uniforms wear them. Bring no flags.

Court of Honor will be held at the Powell Junior High School, Lamont street and Hiatt place, Saturday at 7:30 p. m., and at the County Building, Hyattsville, Md., Saturday, February 23, at 7:30 p. m.

'The Best Dog Is'—a Cocker Spaniel

Says Col. Henry May, Whose "Boz" Is Rapidly Taking a Place in the Washington Scene; Intelligence of Breed and Hunting Ability Praised.

Every dog owner claims champion intelligence for his particular pet dog, but when Col. Henry May is content to have but one dog, and that a red cocker spaniel, it means something.

There was a time when a visitor to the historic May mansion at 1325 K street would have been greeted by the friendly yelps of a few setters, pointers or cockers. Now there is only Boz to act as official censor of visitors, which he does with a few capable sniffs. If you pass the nose test as a person who will be desirable to his master, Boz welcomes you royally, with much tail wagging and prancing about on the mellowed, polished floors.

Perhaps you already know Boz? He is rapidly becoming as much a part of the Washington scene as the dome of the Capitol or the bulfinch front of the White House. In the past year and a half that the colonel has had him he has been frequently seen with this Virginian of erect and distinguished bearing. When he is not out with Col. May, Boz may be seen looking out of the window of the downstairs sitting room of the K street home.

"I like cockers because they are intelligent," Col. May declared. Boz has sense. He is a very nice dog. He is so intelligent that I never have to worry about his behavior when I take him with me. He is just a part of the family. When he is not with me he watches traffic, standing up in that chair over there just as he is doing now. In addition, he is a very good watchdog."

Although Col. May has never hunted over cockers, the cocker, properly trained, is a natural-born retriever. They are low and close to the ground and therefore pick up scents more quickly. Then, too, they do not need as much exercise as the larger dogs and no not gambol so much. A cocker, on unearthing a brood of ruffled grouse, will give tongue, driving the birds into the nearest tall tree, so experts who have used this breed declare. The cocker spaniel goes back many years, being considered by canine historians an almost pure-blooded dog from which by cross breeding have come the setter and the pointer.

The standard for the breed places emphasis on a flat, silky coat, feathery in appearance, but never really curly, that is usually black, red or parti-colored. This dog has a nicely developed square muzzle and jaw, well-developed skull and forehead, full but not prominent eyes of a hue to harmonize with his coat, lobular ears set low and not extending beyond the nose and compact, firmly knit body.

Revision Is Scheduled to Improve Service to U. S. Workers.

A shift in the routes of the Alexandria bus line and the bus line of the Capital Transit Co. operating from Twenty-second and Shepherd streets northeast, was ordered yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission to afford better service for employes in the Government buildings along Constitution avenue.

The service becomes effective Monday.

The Capital Transit Co. line from Twenty-second and Shepherd street northwest was authorized to be extended from one of its terminals at Tenth and D streets to Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue. Only some of the buses will follow the extended route; the remainder will stop at the other terminal at Pennsylvania avenue near Seventeenth street northwest.

AAA Change Plan Pleases Sen. Byrd

'Worst Feature' in Proposal Eliminated, He Says.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, chief opponent of amendments to the agriculture adjustment act last session, said today "the most obnoxious feature had been eliminated" in the revision of those proposed changes in the adjustment law.

"The most obnoxious feature," he said, according to the Associated Press, "was the universal licensing provision, which he said would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to require licenses of all producers without their consent.

However, the Virginian reserved blanket indorsement of the new amendments until he has studied them further.

Another provision which Byrd opposed was stricken completely. It would, Byrd said, have placed under the Secretary of Agriculture's control the production of all commodities produced by any farmer who had received a benefit payment on any commodity.

U. S. Proposal To Limit Arms Up at Geneva

Objections to Plan Given by Hugh Wilson Heard From Britain, Italy.

Geneva, Feb 14 (AP).—A special committee of the disarmament conference today accepted America's plan to turn the glare of publicity on the arms traffic as the basis of its future discussions.

Objections to parts of the plan, however, were entered by such important European powers as Great Britain and Italy.

Hugh Wilson, United States Minister to Switzerland, placed the plan before the committee, which tackled the difficult arms question after months of inactivity of the disarmament conference.

Three Purposes Revealed.

"The American Government," he said, "attaches peculiar importance to the success of the three-fold project now before us: For the regulation of the arms traffic and manufacture, for the establishment of a supervisory body, and for the publicity of expenditures.

"It is conceived as something which will not only be a definite contribution itself, but will facilitate the preparation of a general convention on the limitation of arms. It has never been our intention to divert the work of this conference from a general convention on the limitation of arms."

Lord Stanhope, British representative, objected to automatic permanent inspection of the armaments of each nation, asserting such inspection should come after, not before, general agreement to limit armaments.

Illicit Traffic Opposed.

He urged concentration against the illicit arms traffic, advocated measures to learn when new nations are piling up armaments and proposed an effective machinery for an arms embargo when it is deemed advisable to impose one. The British spokesman also urged cessation of government assistance to arms firms.

Italy's spokesman, describing the American request as too ambitious, demanded simplification of the effort to limit arms and asserted the convention should limit its work to harnessing the trade in arms.

France and Belgium accepted the American plan in principle, the former saying any French armaments would maintain the essential of the plan and the latter offering only technical modifications.

Twenty Twins Tough Problem For Teachers

But in Identity Only, for Western's Doubles All Are Bright.

Life is a baffling game of doubles for teachers out at Western High School, where ten sets of twins ponder daily this year over the traditional "Three R's"—sometimes amusing and sometimes amazing their instructors.

"Are we seeing double?" they often have asked themselves, chuckling as they recall that Western's twins are good scholars and active in many extra-curriculum activities.

John and Frank Craighead, who were graduated February 1 and now are taking post-graduate work, are 18, and look as alike as two raindrops on the same window pane. They were in the same classes throughout their undergraduate days and are fond of the outdoors. Hunting and fishing are their principal recreations.

Other Western twins include Janey and Rae Johnson, who come from Florence, S. C.; Theodore and Milton Hoffman, junior members of the cadet corps, and Charles and Francis Tait.

Since all the twins stand well in their studies, the motto for Western's doublets seems to be "Two heads are better than one."

Serious Seed Shortage In U. S. Is Forecast

Youth, Stoical, Awaiting Trial After Slaying

Waddey in Heathsville Jail Denies He Remembers Shooting Widow.

Heathsville, Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—George R. Waddey, jr., 20-year-old youth, who goes on trial in the Northumberland County Circuit Court March 11, charged with the murder of Mrs. Mollie Whaley, widow of Noble J. Whaley, at her home near Remo, Northumberland County, last Sunday, remains stoical and unperturbed in his cell in the Heathsville Jail, where he was committed soon after the shooting.

According to J. E. Anderson, sheriff of Northumberland County, Waddey is quite reticent, but says he has no recollection of what occurred.

Robert H. Chilton, jr., Northumberland's young Commonwealth's attorney, will lead the prosecution. So far the motive for the crime has not been determined, and the case is baffling to the authorities.

Waddey, who has been working on the Whaley farm for the last two years, is charged with having shot and killed the 64-year-old widow with a shotgun while she was feeding her chickens near her home. The first shot fired penetrated the head of the woman, who made a futile attempt to crawl to the house. The second shot was to the abdomen and Mrs. Whaley died almost instantly. Miss Mary Whaley, pretty 22-year-old daughter, made a desperate effort to save her mother's life. Her attempt to reach the telephone in the house was foiled by Waddey, the prosecution charges.

Mrs. Whaley's nephew, George Whaley, was in a boat near the house. His attention was attracted by the shots and he arrived after Mrs. Whaley's death.

Dr. Lee S. Liggan, of Irvington, and Dr. L. E. Cockrell, of Reedville, and T. T. Bouldin, with Sheriff J. E. Anderson and Commonwealth Attorney H. Chilton, viewed the body, after which it was removed to the Elmore funeral home in Kilmarnock. Funeral services were conducted from the Wicomico Methodist Protestant Church Monday.

Besides her daughter, Mrs. Whaley is survived by two sisters and a brother, Mrs. Lee Norton, of Rehoboth Church; Mrs. W. B. Clark, and C. T. Myers, of Remo.

Reich to Seek Foreign Marts For Cheap Car

Wood Gas Autos Cost Little to Run; Export Fund Raised.

Berlin, Feb. 14 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's Reich today announced development of a low-priced automobile of little fuel consumption which will "naturally become the object of the first magnitude for exportation."

German automobile manufacturers have started a sizable export fund to enable Germany to compete with the industry of other nations in the world's markets.

Hitler declared at the international auto show:

"We are going to solve the problem of the cheap car because we must. Already one of our leading constructors has devised a car which will cost no more than a middle-priced motorcycle, while the consumption of fuel will be the least imaginable."

Automobiles using wood gas or ordinary city gas for fuel already are appearing in Berlin streets. The drivers claim success and have praised their economy. The wood gas cars look like regular gasoline motor cars, except that they have large, but not unusually conspicuous, wood containers in the rear. They resemble large carrier trunks extending downward from the rear window.

FLAVOR

Most well-made Scotch Whiskies are smooth . . . mellow . . . full-bodied . . . just like LONG JOHN. ¶ In good whisky, those qualities are taken for granted. BUT, when it comes to FLAVOR, LONG JOHN is in a class by itself. Here's the true Scotch flavor a Scotsman looks for in his own "wee drap"—a flavor as round and brave and distinctive as the bottle it comes in. ¶ And isn't FLAVOR, after all, what you really want in a Scotch whisky?

LONG JOHN is made in Scotland's largest distillery, in Glasgow on the banks of the Clyde. It is imported solely by Austin, Nichols & Co., whose reputation since 1855 attests the quality of any product bearing their name.

Talk on Bermuda Attracts Crowd

James N. Findlay, world traveler, lecturer and cruise director, last night delivered The Washington Post travel lecture, "Bermuda, the Treasure Isle," before a capacity audience in the Masonic auditorium.

This was the second time Capt. Findlay spoke before a Post travel-lecture audience, since last night's lecture was a "repeat" of the lecture he delivered two months ago. The lecture last night was the result of many requests by travel lovers who were unable to be present at the previous lecture.

Tuesday evening Austria will be visited in fancy, as a lecture on that interesting country is delivered in the Masonic auditorium. Tickets for this lecture may be obtained from The Post, or may be purchased at the box office on the evening of the lecture.

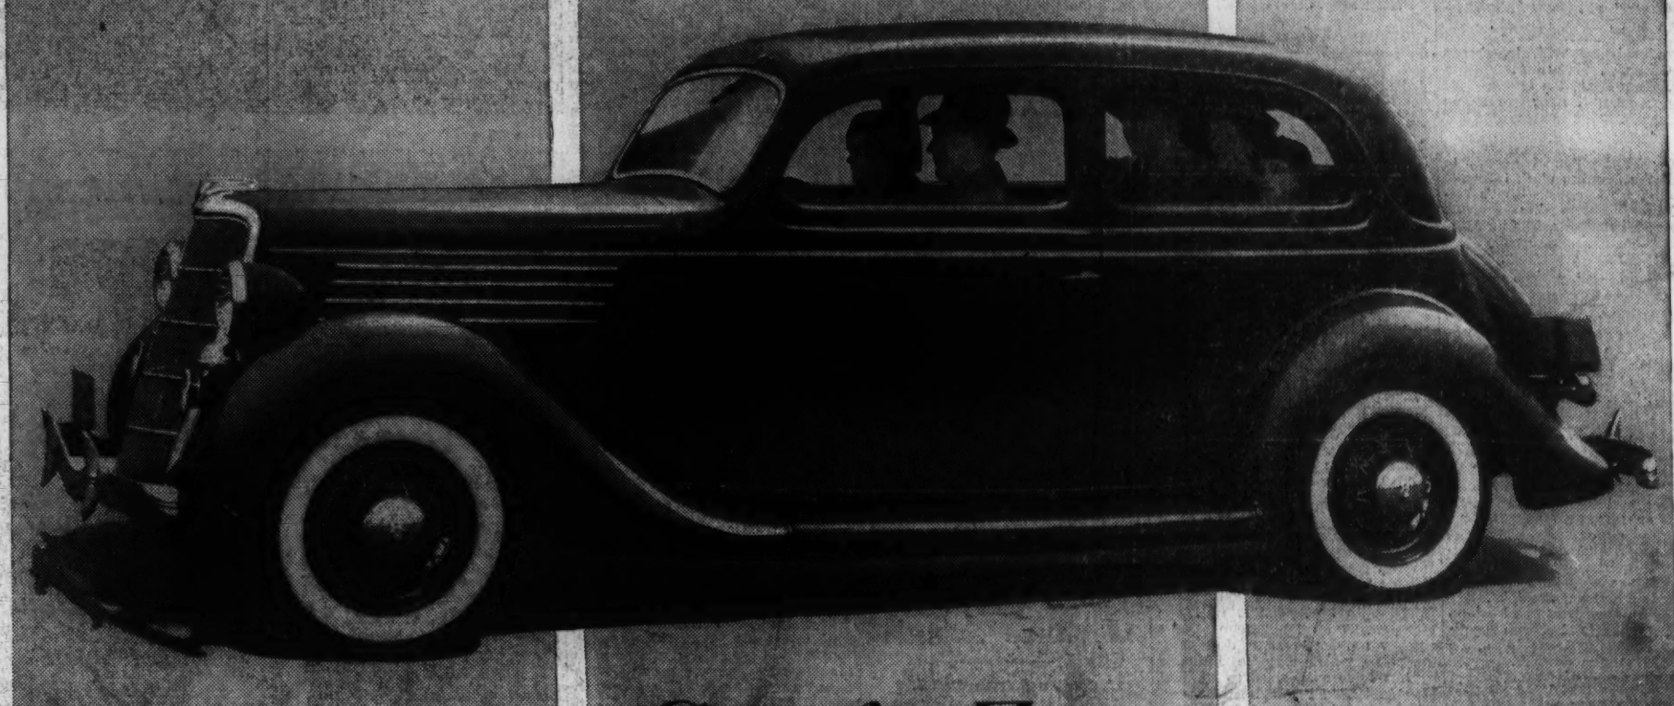
POWER ZONE



V-8 POWER

With the introduction of the 8-cylinder, V-type engine, Ford brought a new standard of performance to the low-priced field.

COMFORT ZONE

Comfort Zone Riding

ECONOMY ZONE

FORD ECONOMY

The 1935 Ford V-8 gives you the most economical car to operate Ford has ever built.

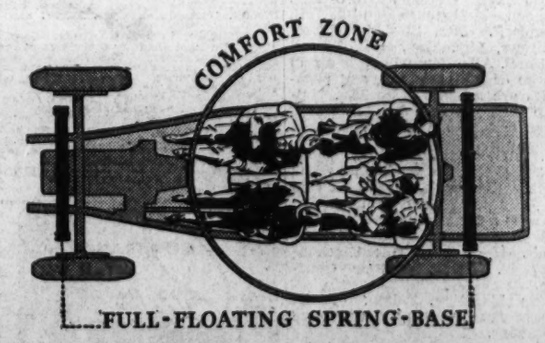
Why take less?

FORD has always aimed to make the automobile-buying dollar go as far as possible.

This was illustrated when Ford brought the V-8 engine to the low-priced field—without increasing operating cost.

This year, the 1935 Ford V-8 gives you traditional Ford low prices, traditional Ford operating economy—and, in addition, riding comfort, body roominess, new beauty and new safety features that will satisfy the requirements of almost everyone.

Consider some of the major improvements in the Ford V-8 for 1935. Take comfort: From this standpoint alone, what a completely rounded car this is! Comfort Zone Riding (explained at right) that gives "front seat comfort" even to rear seat passengers. Deep cushioned, high-backed, wider seats. Big, air-balloon tires. Easier steering and a clutch that responds to the touch of your foot. Consider safety: There's safety glass all around—on all models—at no additional cost. A new, welded all-steel body that's insulated with sound-deadening material. New, more powerful brakes, with an unusually high ratio of braking surface to car weight. And a lower center of gravity that gives increased safety and stability on curves!



Note how the springs of the new Ford V-8 are placed out beyond the front and rear axles and serve only to cushion the load. They provide a long springbase for riding ease, and retain the 112-inch wheelbase for handling ease. Both front and rear seats are cradled between the springs—enabling all passengers to ride in the Comfort Zone.

Why be satisfied to receive less than this for your money?

Examine this new 1935 Ford V-8. Ride in it. You'll realize that it is not only a new Ford V-8 car—but a new automobile value.

'Aloha Oe' Is Favorite Number of Patrons of Night Club.

By Kay Ware.

That song-guessing contest scored a surprise at Hi-Hat the other night when Miss Dorothy Raynor, interior decorator, of New York City, guessed "Aloha Oe," as the islanders most-often-requested number. She won on a hunch, something like this:

Time was when Miss Raynor traveled by water from Los Angeles to Catalina Island. At the island, boats are serenaded with this song. So she took a look at the Paradise Islanders, and landed the prize of two champagne cocktails. The islanders, being Hawaiian, probably would be asked to sing "Aloha Oe."

Oddly enough, Hi-Hat reports this song was topped on only one night. On other occasions leading requests were for present hits.

Those Hawaiians have memories—they've sung as many as 200 different numbers in one evening.

Celebrities: Thomas Hamilton, Prince of Wales, in "As Thousands Cheer," with Miss Julie Zimmerman and James Mitchell.

If you're bored with tea-rooms, try the Parrot, Twentieth and R streets. Luncheon, tea and a dusk to dinner cocktail hour are all in the program.

After theater hour is a delightful time for blini, open fireplaces to take off the evening chill, informal violin and piano music—that's Casino Russe. Enteraining line-up: Felix Amstel and ork, Mischa Markoff, vagabond singing gypsy and guitarist; Emil Konevsky, composer-pianist; Lee Gould, French diseuse.

John Slaughter at the Willard's bamboo room gets fan mail from 14 States and two Territories. If you don't know why, hear Ernestine Gardner and Fenton Froom sing their duo, "Let's Have Breakfast in Bed."

Shoreham's line-up: Shirley Dall, song-and-dance artist formerly with Earl Carroll's "Vanities," is doing "Hot Cha." Lou Melan is M. C. and impersonator, De Angelo and Porter introduce the Maxixe, the original dance from which the carioca came. (According to releases, the carioca has come from a lot of different dances.) Grant Gardner is a Swiss bell soloist.

In the lounge, Tiny and piano make you gurgle between cocktails and Barnee and ork do double duty for afternoon dancers.

Jockey Club draws upon its patronage for its floor show. In addition to featured Kitty Simons in dancing and singing, impromptu acts were supplied by Jackie Talley, Eddie Young, Joe Reyser, Tommy Mack and Hal Menchen.

Heigh-Ho's Pete Macias walks around with a proud smile on his face. And why not? For the combination acts of Consuelo Flowerton and Jack Minovitch have made guests clamor for more and more encores. Pete thinks he's a pretty good impresario, because he "discovered" the violinist's potentialities as a star performer and knew at a glance that Miss Flowerton's talents would be at best advantage at Heigh-Ho.

"Lullaby of Broadway" should be the next big hit, according to the orchestra. Even now, they play it as often as ten times a night. It's from "Gold-Diggers of 1935."

Lesson number three in the terms and expressions used by musicians. The Sidney Orchestra members in the Mayflower lounge are responsible for this list.

Symp—An abbreviation to denote a symphony orchestra or a symphonic arrangement.

Explosive—A quick, loud note, sometimes used to heighten the rhythmic effect in a band. It is usually played by the brass.

Standard—Any number which, unlike most jazz, continues to be popular. "Stardust" is an outstanding example of a "standard."

In Your Hat—An orchestra leader's direction to the trumpeters, which means that a passage is to be played with a felt hat as a mute.

Fake—A band or a musician may "fake" a number which he doesn't know, simply playing harmonious "chords" or picking out the melody by ear.

Sweet—A band that is sweet is one which stresses the melodic qualities of a tune, in other words, disregarding the rhythm.

Another glossary of these terms will appear shortly.

Bits about Fran Trapp, accordion soloist at Club L'Hiver. Memorizes a score after one reading . . . teaches piano and accordion and it is rumored that money doesn't count as far as pupils are concerned . . . is often visited by artists and musicians, who admittedly like his playing . . . has several radio programs on local stations.

Other acts at Club L'Hiver include Charel de Thomee, French singer and pianist; Rooslyn Roy, blues singer; Charles Mayer, radio barytone, and the New Yorkers.

Bill Strickland, of the Lotus, is floating around the Gulf of Mexico. He's deep-sea fished, covered Florida night spots, developed a tan. "I'll expect to look like an Indian upon my return," he says. Further, "this trip's doing me a world of good, and I don't credit it to my visit to the fountain of youth at St. Augustine."

Club Habana line-up: Tudel and Jean, with the race story dance "the Cubanacan," the Roddy twins, Moe Baer, and Habaneers, Lew Cates and Russ Cullen with songs.

At Madrillon: Jack Martin and Adele Dixon, dance team, Mary Miller, acrobatics. Leon Brusiloff and boys furnish singing and dance music.

Rendezvous features weekly dancing from 9 to 2 a. m. Sunday tea dancing is from 4 to 7, and again at 9 in the evening.

Through error in a feature story last Sunday, The Post referred to the Spanish Village as the one which in the early days of night clubs had small cubicles for its clients which later were fitted with glass doors at the instigation of Policewoman Mina Van Winkle. This story of early Washington night-club history was true not of the Spanish Village but of the Valencia.

Hearing Slated On Bus Permit At Alexandria

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The question of granting permission to a new bus line to use the streets of Alexandria, in competition with the A. B. & W. Rapid Transit Co., will be presented to the City Council at 7:30 o'clock tonight. To accommodate the large attendance expected, the meeting probably will be held in the Corporation Court room instead of the council chamber.

The bus concern, the Monumental Lines, with headquarters in Baltimore, seeks an amendment to a city ordinance which designates the route which may be followed by bus lines authorized to conduct both interstate traffic business and intrastate.

When the ordinance was adopted, in 1932, there were two lines operating between Alexandria and Washington. The A. B. & W. line, known as the Red Bus, owned and operated by Robert L. May, held a Class A certificate from the State Corporation Commission, permitting both interstate and intrastate business. The competing Blue Line, was authorized to conduct only intrastate business, and could not transport passengers between points in Virginia, but only from Virginia points to and from the District of Columbia.

The restrictions placed upon the Blue Line and the route laid down by the City Council finally resulted in that line discontinuing operation. The A. B. & W. since has supplied the only bus transportation between Alexandria and Washington and between local points in Alexandria.

The Monumental Lines, it is understood, will procure a Class A certificate from the corporation commission and has announced it does not desire to use streets now being used by the A. B. & W. Co.

The suggestion has been made of prohibiting operation of buses on King street, and the city council recently issued instructions that only one bus should occupy any square on that street at a time

Both lines have circulated petitions to the city council, the one of the A. B. & W. line stating that the services being rendered by that company are satisfactory and, in effect, there is no room for competition, and that of the Monumental Lines asking a route be assigned for its operation and stating competition is desirable.

It is understood the Monumental Lines, if their petition is granted, will place 15 new buses in service immediately and supplement that number as conditions warrant.

The Little Theater group, recently organized, will present its first performance tonight in Lyceum Hall, Duke street, with a program of three one-act plays.

The first, a tragedy of the North Dakota prairie, is directed by Ruth Perrot, who does dramatic work in a local radio station. In the cast are Hildegarde Thorp, J. H. Orendorff, John Harrison Kirk, Coleman R. Gray and Edith R. Landis.

"Overtones," the second play, is a study in dual personalities, directed by Mrs. Helen Arny Macaon, headmistress of St. Agnes School, and Mrs. Caroline Minor Ely, of the school faculty. Four women are in the cast, Mrs. H. B. Temple, Miss Sarah Ellen Biwers, Mrs. Frederick Ballard and Miss Courtenay Cochran.

"The Travelers," by Booth Tarkington, will be directed by Marshall Baggett. The players are Paul T. Arlt, Cary J. Randolph, C. Fred Schreiner, Mrs. Sterling McKittrick, Miss Mary Ellen Cato, Kenneth Stabler, Miss Deane Lindsey, Mrs. John R. Howland, Clement E. Conger and A. Stanley King.

Stage settings for the three plays were designed under direction of Wesley S. Bessell, assisted by Urban S. Lambert, jr. The curtain was designed and painted by Miss Sarah Baker, with the help of Mrs. Stephen McDonough and J. H. Orendorff. Mrs. Eliphalet Fraser Andrews, Mrs. Thomas E. Sebrell and Mrs. Allen Hunt Robe ts are in charge of the costuming and properties are assembled by Mrs. Malcolm Westcott Hill, Mrs. H. Burge Caton and Mrs. Albert Miller.

J. Randall Caton, jr., spoke Wednesday at the weekly luncheon of the Alexandria Lions' Club in the George Mason Hotel. Mr. Caton is a former district governor and international trustee of Kiwanis. He was introduced by Andrew W. Clarks, program chairman.

Miss Madeline Fulton, of the George Mason High School, gave recitations.

John P. Straus, secretary of the club and treasurer of its charity fund, announced that in January opictal examinations were given and glasses furnished 12 indigent school children.

MARY MILLER, dancing at the Madrillon.

Laborites Charge Finance 'Scandal'

Nathan's remarks. His reference to commodtiy speculations was to crash of the pepper, peanut and shellac markets.

It was a bad day for the Prime Minister. Laborites attacked the government on unemployment relief. MacDonald charged the opposition with fostering a crisis.

"I'll never agree to serve the working classes by telling them the first stage in the service we want to give them would be a financial crisis," the prime minister thundered.

"The country's evolution is bound to continue, and the more it is evolution and not revolution and crisis the quicker will be progress in the long run."

It was the prime minister's first set speech since last November. He was interrupted repeatedly, and the speaker had to appeal for silence, while MacDonald angrily departed from his formal remarks to ejaculate:

"These insulting remarks are most offensive!"

"So are you!" came back shouts from the benches.

Meanwhile, despite the bitter attacks on the government unemployment bill, it was sped trrough all stages in the House of Lords tonight. It already has been carried in commons, and royal assent was expected to make it a law tomorrow.

Funds to Pay Tolson Denied By U. S., State

Health Bureau Officer of Montgomery Held Not Qualified.

Discontinuance of Federal and State funds for partial payment of the salary of the sanitary inspector of the Montgomery County Health Department has been ordered, Dr. V. L. Ellicott, county health officer informed the Montgomery County Commissioners yesterday.

The Public Health Service and the Maryland State Department of Health both protested the appointment of Lawrence Tolson, Fusionist, on the grounds that he did not have the proper training for the position and several weeks ago informed the commissioners that the funds would be discontinued unless a sanitary engineer was appointed.

The commissioners yesterday appointed Peyton Mannar, Potomac Fuhionist leader, a clerk in the Bethesda Liquor Dispensary, at a salary of $1,500 a year, to replace Rupert Hughes.

Jesse W. Nicholson, jr., son of the Chevy Chase dry leader, Mrs. Jesse W. Nicholson, was appointed to a post as clerk in the office of the county auditor's office at $1,500 a year, to replace Miss Hilda Hill. Both appointments are effective February 18.

The commissioners discussed school bus and janitor appointments with P. L. Snyder, county supervisor of school property. The appointments, however, will be made by the school board.

Shift Opposed In Game Laws

Resolution Prepared for Legislators at Session in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Feb. 14 (AP).—A resolution passed by Maryland sportsmen at a protest meeting opposing changes in the State game department was prepared today to be transmitted to legislative officials in Annapolis.

About 100 sportsmen, representing a score of hunting, fishing and conservation societies, adopted the resolution this week. A committee was formed to "do everything within its power" to carry out the purpose of the protest.

The resolution objects to the abolition of the posts of State game warden and his chief deputy and to the diversion of the State game department's funds. The warden and chief deputy are under civil service and cannot be dropped, but Governor Nice made no salary recommendations for them in his proposed budget. The resolution declares there is "a prime necessity and need for carrying out to the fullest extent the merit system in the State of Maryland."

A paragraph asserts the protest group "is definitely opposed to the diversion of any funds received from the sale of hunters, licenses and insists that the dedicated State game protection fund be used for the protection and propagation of game, and not revert to the general treasury.

The committee charged with carrying out the purpose of the resolution is composed of Ralph Sharretts, secretary of the Improvement Association of Baltimore City and past president of the Sportsmen's Luncheon Club; M. E. Towner, member of the executive board and past president of the Maryland State Game Protective Association, and J. D. Steele and Charles H. Linville, members of the Maryland State Game Protective Association.

Broadway —Goes to Miami

By Ed Sullivan

Dawn Patrol.

Miami Beach, Feb. 14.—At 7 o'clock Tuesday morning, white patches of steamy fog blotted out the far turns of the Hialeah Race Track, the vapor blowing this way and that in the gusts of wind that brought to our ears the drumming of thoroughbreds' hoofs, long before the lathered horses shot into view going hell-bent for leather.

I've often made the dawn patrol of Broadway night clubs, but this was the dawn patrol of the race track and much more fascinating, a back-stage view of the horses and jockeys with their hair down. In the afternoon, all is swank and glamorous. At the matinee there are bugle calls, red coated attendants, silk-suited jockeys—in the morning, the race track is itself.

Somehow or other, standing there in the Florida dawn, my thoughts reverted to the Broadway theaters which change their stage and screen bills every Friday morning. At 7 o'clock on any Friday morning on Broadway, stage hands grunt wearily as they haul in the new scenery and drops. Actors and actresses, who will be smartly attired for the first matinees, rehearse in working attire. At 7 a. m., members of the orchestra, who will be dinner-jacketed for the first show, now can be seen stripped to their shirts, their faces covered with stubble and perspiration.

The race track at dawn is something like the theater at dawn, but here is greater appeal and sharper color. "Sets" of horses pounding through the morning haze excite the imagination. Lean-faced men and red-faced men with jowls are in front of the grand stand, stop watches in hand.

Mose Lowenstein, Trainer Martin, Trainer Mary Hirsch, who is Max Hirsch's good-looking daughter, and a score of clockers and assistant trainers, might easily represent Louis K. Sidney, Maj. Bowes, Marvin Schenck and Bob Weitman expertly watching the rehearsal of a Friday morning show at the Capitol, Loew's State or the Paramount.

The sun was climbing up the ladder of blue sky, lifting itself from one rung of clouds to another as Jerry Brady and Mose Lowenstein led me back to the stables.

* * * *

"Cooling out the hots," said Brady, jerking his head toward the blanketed horses that were being walked around the tiny ovals of each stable. He meant that the horses were being walked until they cooled out. But the race-track expression for it has tang and color.

Smell of hay and wet straw, the soapy odor of hot water that is sponged on the horses after they work out, the incense of wood fires and the strong smell of liniments filled the air. In the 10-yard aisle between each row of stables, stableboys were cleaning saddles and racing "rigs" and the boots of riders, each with a shoe tree in it, dried in the sun.

"Cooling out the hots," on occasion, becomes figuratively a whipping post for jockeys who get swell-headed after successes. When a jockey under contract to a stable becomes hammy, the trainer, with biting malice, assigns him to walk a horse around and around the tiny circle in which they cool 'em out.

The reason the lash bites deep is that it is as exercise boys and cooler-outers that each jockey starts when he is an apprentice. To make a Sande, a Fator, a Coucci, a Workman, a Renick or a Merritt or Mills return to the same menial task that marked his noviceship is more than a flogging post—it is a branding iron that bites hard and deep. But it is effective.

* * * *

Ben Bernie shortly will become a race track owner, I learned in the jockey room where the midget stars, the mighty little men of page 1 dress between races. Commenting on the gay silks that hung high on the walls, Brady pointed out the difficulty of a new owner getting a combination of colors for racing use that hasn't been used before.

Bernie's racing silks will be figured musical notes, in black, on a jacket of white. The notes will represent his theme song, but there will be no commercial announcement embroidered on the sleeves.

Bernie and George Olson are well liked by the race track crowd, so is Al Jolson. They consider Lou Holtz too excitable and too squawky. They respect Sam H. Harris, and they appreciate George White's smartness. Kelly and Adler, of the Yacht Club Boys, are prime favorites. They like to see Abe Lyman at the track, as his cussing fills them with delight—if not inspiration.

They can't understand Richman's preference for an airplane to the horses, and from the tone they adopt when they discuss this, you understand that, to their way of thinking, any one who doesn't love horses must have been a problem child. I'm going back and see these colorful colonists again. I had a swell time before the matinee curtain lifted.

Girl Shot Dead Day She'd Wed; Fiance Sought

Clarksburg Blonde Killed Self, Trooper Says; Note, Gun Found.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—The body of Miss Agnes Neely, 26, pretty blonde hostess at the Stonewall Jackson Hotel here, was found today—which was to have been her wedding day—on a bed in the hotel manager's office. There was a bullet wound through her head and a revolver was tightly gripped in her left hand. The body, nude, was covered with a sheet.

State Trooper T. K. Long and City Detective George Simon tonight expressed belief she killed herself, pointing out that the family said the girl was left-handed. A note the family believed was written by her was found in the room. Other officers were puzzled as to whether she killed herself or was slain. Dr. Leroy C. Goff, coroner, was undecided.

In the note, if genuine, Miss Neely gave instructions for her funeral, asking that she be buried in a certain pink, self-knitted dress, and stating: "I just can't go on this way."

A search is being made for the girl's fiance, who, her relatives say, was James Powers, a salesman, of Cincinnati.

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ord M. Neely, said the wedding was to have taken place at 8 o'clock tonight, after which the couple was to have gone on a two-month trip to Florida, and then on a two-year trip abroad. Police have failed to trace Powers in Cincinnati and are now seeking information about him in Cleveland, where friends say he said he formerly resided.

The girl's body was discovered in his office on the third floor by H. M. Wistozkey, the hotel manager, when she failed to report for duty this morning as breakfast hostess, as she had arranged.

Miss Neely was graduated with an A. B. degree in 1929 at West Virginia University, where she was popular and a member of the Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. In her last semester she was married to Edgar Ray Minnich, now a lawyer of Wellsburg, who was graduated from the law college of the university in 1932, but they were divorced a year and a half later. After her graduation Miss Neely was instructor of physical education in State Teachers Institute.

Civil Service Voted by Group In Montgomery

Civic Federation Asks All County Aids Be Placed Under System.

All Montgomery County employes, including the police and excepting only the elected officers, should be brought into the civil service, it was voted by the Montgomery County Civic Federation last night. The federation passed a request to the Maryland Legislature for a mandatory law providing for civil service.

The group's meeting at the Bethesda Elementary School was enlivened by bitter clashes over policies of the county's present Fusion-dominated government.

A resolution condemning the making of contracts for county employes was adopted. Speakers asserted that such contracts had been made because the Fusionists desired to keep the liquor control board in office, despite campaign promises to abolish hte board. They asserted also that the contracts were intended to thwart a bill passed by the legislature and signed by Gov. Harry W. Nice to permit the county treasurer, at present a Democrat, to appoint two assistants and six clerks in his office.

This action, Rhees M. Burket declared, brought "partisan politics" into the federation. H. S. Yohe denied the appropriateness of the adjective "partisan" and pointed out that Nice, a Republican, has approved the treasurer's bill.

The group urged enactment of a statute to permit the establishment of a park district in any section of the county where the resident taxpayers vote for it. It voted to set up a committee to survey additional revenue sources for the county.

Warfare Waged On Tax Publicity

Bacon Urges Committee to Repeal Provision.

A House committee was urged yesterday by Representative Bacon (Republican), New York, to act immediately to change the 1934 revenue law so that those little pink slips giving the low down on a taxpayer's financial status won't be made public after all.

Almost at once, the Associated Press said, there came from within the House Ways and Means Committee an indication that hearings will be held to determine whether the publicity clause of the income-tax law should be repealed.

Bacon wrote Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, asking such action and received a verbal reply that Doughton himself favored repealing the clause. He said, however, he did not see how hearings could be held in time for action before the March 15 tax-return date.

Florida Spots Luring Many From Capital

'Everybody's' Going South, Notes Cuban Envoy's Charming Daughter.

French and Argentine Emissaries Are Among Several Leaving.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Senorita Zoe Patterson, one of the attractive young daughters of the new Ambassador of Cuba, remarked yesterday that everybody she had met during her few weeks in Washington was intending to go to Florida. Never having been in Florida, she wanted to know the attraction of the place as a winter resort. Senorita Patterson had lived in England for the past nine years, where her father was Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and is so busy discovering Washington that she has had no time to think of any other place in this country. But she is right in saying that "everybody" is leaving for Florida, or some other Southern point.

The Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye are planning a trip to Winter Park, Fla., to spend a fortnight, and the Ambassador of Argentina and Senora de Espil will leave one day next week for Sea Island Beach, Ga., where they plan to spend a short vacation.

Judge and Mrs. Rush LaMott Holland will leave Tuesday for Florida to spend about six weeks. They will go first to Miami for two weeks and then will join friends for a motor trip over the State, visiting resorts on both the east and west coasts. Mr. and Mrs. John Lewis Smith plan to leave tomorrow for Palm Beach and during their stay will visit Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Raymond, of Washington, at their winter home in Hollywood Beach.

Youngs Going to Florida.

Col. and Mrs. Clarence M. Young, who have been on a brief honeymoon in the Capital, will return to New York today and next week will go to Miami. They will remain there some time and then go by plane to California.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Eberhart Haynes will leave today for Coconut Grove, near Miami, to spend two weeks with friends.

There are many members of Capital society who are already in the South, among them Mr. and Mrs. Absolam Waller and their daughter, Miss Louise Waller, who was among the debutantes of the winter. Mr. and Mrs. Waller and their daughter are in St. Petersburg, charming old town said to have derived its name from the flip of a coin. In the early eighties Gen. John Constantine Williams, son of Detroit's first mayor and Michigan's first millionaire, was an asthma victim, and while in Florida he participated in the naming of the city, losing to Petrovitch Demenscheff, exiled member of the Russian nobility, who built the first railroad into the city. Demenscheff, who had become a close friend of Williams, said that the community of 200 people needed a name.

Urged Detroit as Name.

"I have a name for it," answered Williams, "It shall be called Detroit, after my birthplace."

"I would like to name this spot after my home, St. Petersburg, Russia," said Demenscheff.

"We will flip a coin," suggested Williams.

A half dollar silver coin was flipped. Williams lost, but he did have the satisfaction of naming St. Petersburg's first hotel. He called it the Detroit, and it still is standing.

This city has made it a business to cater to the sun-worshiper. No matter what the recreational hobby of the visitor may be, it is provided for his entertainment.

Many on West Coast.

Still farther South, on the West Coast, there are a number of Washingtonians wintering. A letter from Miss Katherine Pearson, who, with her mother, Mrs. William E. Pearson, brings enthusiastic accounts of Sarasota, on the Gulf of Mexico, which many visitors prefer to the East Coast of Florida. Miss Pearson writes of a motor trip to Lake Wales, in the heart of Florida, midway between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf: a veritable oasis in the rather drab landscape which surrounds it. She describes an inn, the Lake Suzanne Chalet, where the party stopped on their trip. A tiny place of Spanish architecture, painted pink and charmingly decorated, is set in the midst of orange groves. The meals are served in a vine-shaded patio among palms, ferns and tropical flowers.

Marionette Show At Church Today

Shinn's Puppets Appear at St. Margaret's.

Mr. Francis Shinn and his marionettes, just returned from a New York engagement, will present a program for all children at St. Margaret's Church, Connecticut avenue and Bancroft place, tomorrow at 2:30 and 8 p. m. An unusual feature of the entertainment will be the up-to-date amplifying system, which will assure every one of hearing every word. The new 24-inch marionettes, their costumes and the stage settings were designed by such eminent Washington artists as Mr. Jawnee Allen, young Mr. Grove and Lucy Woolley.

The program consists of "Poobah the Magician," "Rumpelstiltskin," a playlet in five scenes; "Tweedledum and Tweedledee," from "Alice in Wonderland," and "Monkeyshines—Three Acrobatic Apes."

With her husband and child she will remain temporarily with her parents at the George Washington Inn.

Mrs. Gasque will entertain at a luncheon February 28 in honor of Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, at the Congressional Club.

Health Water Renews Vigor At Danger Age

Beverage Excellent for Those Who Have Little Time to Exercise.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

ONE WAY of putting Father Time in his place and making him remain a mythical character is to drink freely of a certain health-giving water which is brought here from Hot Springs, Ark. It is especially recommended for those who view 45 as the last milepost of youth and are prone in the years thereafter to accept body ailments as necessary evils.

In hundreds of cases, doctors tell us, the man or woman who reaches middle age ceases to exercise properly and to eat proper foods. As a result, many suffer from rheumatism, stomach disorders and other ailments. This soft, natural, noncarbonated water is considered excellent for checking and overcoming many of these disorders.

It also is an excellent beverage which you can drink in any quantity and relish.

The busy man or woman particularly needs it to help the system overcome the effect of too much work and too little exercise.

An Automatic Rhymer.

An ingenious young man—who by the way, lives in Washington—has been writing limericks and versifying in a variety of ways ever since he can remember. In fact, he says, he literally lisped in numbers.

His interest in poetry led him to devise one of the cleverest little automatic rhymers that has ever peeped over the store counter. In fact, it's the only handy rhymer of its kind.

To explain it the young poet penned these lines:

Take any word
You've ever heard—
I'll give you those that rhyme;
In fact, a score
Of words or more
In just one minute's time.
And you can use
Me as you choose—
In French, Dutch or Chinook.
Though I am small
The sum of all
My words would fill a book.

Some of our outstanding poets and writers, and even a number of amateur rhymesters in official life, have written the young man letters complimenting him on his unusual invention and expressing themselves amazed at the versatility of the small disk.

You may buy one in a local store. It will cost you only 25 cents.

A New Cleanser Offered.

You'd scarcely think to look at it that the powder displayed in the handy metal containers could do so many things. But try it! If you have ink stains on your fingers it's the easiest thing in the world to wash them off with the powder. It removes dirt, lipstick, grease and even odors and does all this in the hat of an eye.

Professional women will find that a tin of the powder will help them keep their hands spic and span. Housewives who are constantly combating a variety of stains should keep some by the kitchen sink.

And those husbands who are amateur mechanics, plumbers and carpenters over the week-end will find that the merest dash of powder will prove effective for the most insidious grease stains.

Spring Dresses on Sale.

Many a spring wardrobe will find its beginning at the special dress sale in a downtown store. Here and now you may buy adorable print frocks made from pure dye silk. There are peasant, shirtwaist and jacket styles, both plain and dressy. The prints come in a myriad of designs and all the new spring colors.

These dresses—which by the way are only $11—are adapted to office and street wear and many are suitable for small informal teas.

Whether you're a stylish stout or have leanings toward a boyish silhouette, you're highly apt to find a frock in your size, and beyond any doubt you'll find one to your taste.

An Oatmeal Soap.

An English concern, which for many years has manufactured sachets, soaps, colognes and cosmetics, scores a new point with some oatmeal soap, which is exactly what sensitive skins are calling for during this trying winter weather.

It is absolutely pure—so pure in fact many physicians recommend it for baby's bath. The cakes are small but so compact and hard they will outlast several ordinary cakes.

A Shower Mat for the Tub.

Those who have their shower over the tub and stand in the tub to take it well know how easy it is to slip with only the curtains to grasp. Slipping, however, becomes unlikely if you use one of the shower mats especially designed to fit in the bottom of the tub. It's only 14 by 34 inches but it gives you ample space—and what is more, protected footing.

Special Tooth Powder.

A large Washington store sponsors a certain tooth powder made up especially for it. It comes in frosty white bottles with attractive colored tops which are decorative assets to any bathroom. The powder itself is highly recommended for both teeth and gums.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 168, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Special Menus Offered to Make Sunday Breakfast More Charming

The special feature of this Sunday breakfast is its attractive set-up. The grapefruit has been effectively garnished to make it more appetizing, and cinnamon cake has been substituted for the rolls or toast that are usually part of the light breakfast.

Attractiveness Can Be Enhanced by Well-Laid Tables.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE SUNDAY breakfast should have some special feature, for this is the one breakfast of the weekly seven that can be eaten without haste. Favorite dishes can be enjoyed and second cups of coffee sipped leisurely without finding it necessary to keep one eye on the clock.

An attractively laid table will add to the charm of your breakfast. You may serve the dishes in separate courses, to make certain that the cooked cereal will be really hot, and the eggs and bacon done to a turn and no more when it is time to eat them. The special feature of the breakfast need not necessarily be in a change of dishes. For example, the everyday grapefruit may be made more tempting with a simple garnish of added grapefruit sections and thin slivers of angelica, candied ginger or citron placed petal fashion from the center of the fruit. A fresh strawberry or maraschino cherry placed in the center will give a blossom-like effect.

The theme of your special feature for the Sunday breakfast should be attractiveness.

What Today Means

By Mary Blake.
"Aquarius."

IF FEBRUARY 15 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:15 a. m. to 1:15 p. m., from 3:15 to 5:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:15 to 10:15 a. m., from 5:15 to 7:15 p. m. and from 10:15 p. m. until midnight.

Time may play a vital part in both business and social affairs on February 15, so it might be good judgment to watch the clock. Lack of decision may cause a relative or friend to lose his temper. If you are wise you will not keep anyone waiting for an answer to any reasonable question.

Do not plunge headlong into any scheme which may look tempting because it has promise of an exciting adventure or new experience, as it is likely to end in an unpleasant manner. Remember we usually have to pay to learn, so first be sure the lesson will be worth the price.

If a woman and February 15 is your birthday, guard against being too easily moved by impulses. If you will accept criticism gracefully, it may prove helpful in many ways. Sentimentality probably is the controlling influence of many of your actions. If this is the case, it is advisable to place a check on it by letting your hand, rather than your heart, regulate your motives as well as acts.

You will possibly have a very practical demonstration of what good luck means very shortly. You may expect a great deal of pleasure through the thoughtfulness of friends or relatives. You should probably be very successful as a teacher, musician, lecturer, demonstrator or writer. Married life should fulfill your fondest expectations.

If a man, and February 15 is your natal day, you have the ability to overcome the most adverse conditions. If you once make up your mind to succeed, nothing can hold you back. Astronomy, medicine, law, politics, as well as work of a literary or educational nature, may offer exceptional financial remuneration.

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

TO give Stephen her hand, while her heart was so utterly Barney's to keep or to toss away, would be too unfair.

When he pleaded, "Even if you don't think you're in love with me now, I'm willing to take a chance," Irene shook her head.

"I couldn't do it, Steve. You deserve a better fate than that. I'm sorry, but you'll get over it. I honestly don't think there's a man living who can't get over the loss of any woman."

Irene asked Steve to take her home early as she was taking the early plane for Los Angeles. They had little to say as they crossed to Alameda. She could see that Steve's hopes had been completely dashed. He hadn't believed her before, but this time there had been a finality in her tone which had convinced him.

When they said good night, she realized she would not see him again.

One can't suffer over two men at the same time, and every nerve in her body was longing for Barney. Just to be alone with him for five minutes would have helped. But fate seemed to have conspired against them, sending them in different directions. Now that she wanted to fly with him, she constantly drew another pilot. He had gone to Los Angeles and would probably be leaving there by the time she arrived. It was always like that.

The girls often changed schedules, so that they might ride with the man they were interested in, but Irene wouldn't do this. If Barney wanted to see her, she knew he would manage it some way.

Eve was evidently in bed. Her door was closed and the light was out. Irene went to her room feeling disappointed but also vaguely excited. At least this trip she would be flying to Los Angeles instead of Seattle.

The next morning, after the restless night, she arose 20 minutes earlier than usual. As it happened, this extra time was all that made it possible to make her plane. When she jumped into her car, she found it wouldn't start. Looking more closely, she discovered that there was no gas, although she had filled the tank the day before and used the car only to come from the airport. The tank had evidently been drained, but the car had been in the garage to which no one had access but Irene and Virginia. Then suddenly she knew. Eve had unlocked the door with Virginia's key, which had been left on the living room mantle.

But why should Eve want her to miss her plane unless for the same reason she had worn her uniform. To get her into trouble.

Thank goodness, there was still time to take a taxi. Irene hurried in to telephone for one and arrived just in time. But she was determined now not to stay another night in the same apartment with a girl like Eve. Anyone who would stoop to such small, sly means of revenge was dangerous.

"I'll get my things and move over to the inn tonight," Irene decided.

But as always personal annoyances faded as soon as she was in the air. And this time she had plenty of other things to think about. Would Barney still be there? Would she see him? And would he have anything to say to her?

In spite of all the evidence to the contrary, her heart persisted in the idea that Barney would be waiting for her.

That he would explain everything. For this reason it didn't seem strange, but divinely right, that as she stepped from the plane he should step up to meet her.

"You got my message?" he asked.

"What message? I haven't heard from you since we were in Seattle."

Barney seized her arm.

"Didn't Eve tell you I telephoned?"

"She said you telephoned her the day you came home."

"I'm talking about last night," Barney explained. "I didn't have time to call you before I left yesterday; so I telephoned from Los Angeles. Eve said you were out, but she would give you my message."

Shopping Habits That Raise Prices Are Target of Federation Campaign

Buying Goods On Approval Is Condemned

Exchange of Merchandise and Abuse of C. O. D. Also Opposed.

THE ENLIGHTENED housewife is doing her thinking before she reaches the department store counter. Faced with the injustices haphazard shopping habits have wrought upon her neighbor's and her own purse, she is determined to improve her buying technique. In Washington, the District Federation of Women's Clubs is pointing the way.

"Thoughtless buying that results in returned merchandise is a hideous boomerang upon the consumer," Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, federation president, declared. Her organization, in cooperation with Miss Ada Lillian Bush, chief of the consumer market section of the Department of Commerce, has directed a "wise spending" survey in the interest of purchasers. The results have been distributed among women shoppers.

"The exchange-of-goods habit, the C. O. D. abuse and the privilege of taking merchandise home on approval," Mrs. Wiley said, "has heaped up enormous expense through extra handling costs. All have tended to boost retail prices and enlarge consumer's bills.

Consumer "Pays the Bill."

"Even the return of Christmas gifts alone amounted to between a quarter and a half million dollars yearly in Washington, according to our survey. The consumer pays the bill."

But forewarned is forearmed. Women, with the facts before them, already have begun to prove themselves wiser and more public spirited shoppers than ever before, according to Miss Bush.

"Many shoppers needed only to have their attention called to the fact that their carelessness hurt others," she said. "Many women who didn't need to watch expenses have become conscientious about accepting department store privileges, lest it boost the bills of their less fortunate neighbors. The depression, I believe, is partially responsible for this humanitarian regard.

And to Recovery.

"In the days of prosperity we couldn't talk to men or women about their careless buying habits. They'd say it was none of our business. And as for their neighbor, they'd say 'let him look out for himself.' Today women are awake to the part they can play in assisting recovery. They realize good buying is as important a factor in sound economics as is good manufacturing and good selling. Conscientious housewives are making a career of being good shoppers."

Are women more indecisive in their purchases than men? Miss Bush cited her survey statistics to prove they are. But, she added hastily, that was before women realized extra service privileges were costing money.

"In the first place, men buy less than women," she explained. "Men buy by brands and they avoid exchanging for the same reason they avoid shopping. They don't think it is their job.

Women Bare Shopping Burden.

"Women, on the other hand, are made to bear the burden of family buying. Confronted with the responsibility of spending the money, they try to make it go as far as they can. This has resulted in many privilege accepting habits. Women hadn't heretofore realized they were buying service as well as merchandise."

What type of purchase do customers exchange most? Miss Bush was asked.

"Women's dresses and women's and misses' wearing apparel comprise 38 per cent of the returns to Washington stores," Miss Bush said. "Evening and party wraps for mothers and daughters are purchased as well as exchanged in greater numbers here than elsewhere in the United States, the latter averaging over nine per cent of the aggregate returns. Household furnishings come next on the list with an average of over eight per cent, while men's apparel comprises only about five and a half per cent."

Uniform Policy Urged.

One of the most interesting outgrowths of the federation and Department of Commerce study was a recommendation for a uniform returned goods policy. This provides that the cost of extra service, such as exchanges and taking purchases on approval, be charged against the individual customer's account, rather than divided among other consumers who do not benefit by it.

"This seems a fair policy," said Miss Bush. "It is only the recent years that stores have been charging dress alterations to the individual who orders them. Hence, today a woman pays only for the hem in her own skirt, and not a part of the cost of all the hems in Washington.

Harris & Ewing.

Women who buy haphazardly and accept extra privileges from department stores are adding to bills of all consumers, says Miss Ada Lillian Bush, chief of the consumer's market section of the Department of Commerce.

Culbertson on Bridge

Selected, Signed and Sealed.

The Crockford Club, New York, has been selected as the battle arena for the forthcoming contract bridge match with Mr. and Mrs. P. Hal Sims. Agreements have been signed and sealed, embodying the conditions of play.

Yes, the match will be held early in March. Mrs. Culbertson and I will play the Culbertson system of 1935 and no stipulation has been made regarding that used by our worthy opponents. They may play any system or systems. Psychic bidding is not debarred.

The match will be private and so is the side bet. We will play 150 rubbers of contract bridge with a time limit of 21 days, playing afternoon and evening each day except Sunday. One day in seven will be allowed for rest, recreation and recuperation.

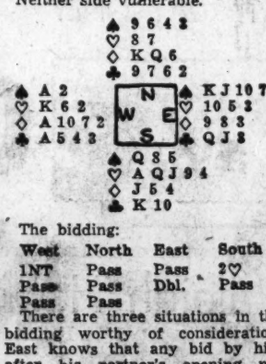
There is a cash penalty for tardiness. Each pair must be in their seats, prepared to play at the appointed hour. And both pairs must complete the match or forfeit a substantial sum of money.

This match is a triple-header. It will decide supremacy in contract bridge, in systems and marital partnership play. Its far-reaching results can not be calculated nor the magnitude of the match underestimated.

Worth a Penalty Double.

It may seem extraordinary that a player may soundly consider a hand not worth a response to his partner's opening notrump bid and yet worth a penalty double of an adverse bid of two in a suit of which his hand holds no trick. East's judgment on today's hand was excellent both on the face of the cards and in view of the actual results.

West, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1NT	Pass	Pass	2♡
Pass	Pass	Dbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

There are three situations in the bidding worthy of consideration. East knows that any bid by him after his partner's opening notrump would be hazardous. A raise to two notrump is followed usually by a rebid to three on mere plus values in the original hand. Obviously, the combined hands are unlikely to have enough "body" for such a contract in view of East's worthless holdings in the red suits. Nor would a bid of two spades by East appear to be a constructive measure. With a split hand, East has no reason for wishing to get into a suit bid in preference to notrump. When the opening bid is passed up to him, South is in an unenviable position. Any overcall is known to be risky, yet North may have considerable supporting strength without having any way to indicate the fact on the first round. South can not be censured for guessing wrong and reopening the bidding.

Now the picture changes for East. Weak as his hand is for offensive purposes, it promises to be powerful in support of a notrumper in defense. Granting that the original bid probably shows an Ace or King in each suit, the East hand probably limits the adverse tricks in the black suits to one possible club. West can probably win two tricks in the red suits single-handed. Where then are the opponents going to muster eight tricks? They would certainly need the fortification of freak patterns and North's pass of the two hearts negatives this possibility.

East doubled two hearts with confidence that there would be no difficulty in setting the contract. He was quite right. Two top spades and a spade ruff, two top clubs, the heart King and the diamond Ace gave the defender seven tricks for a set of 250 points. The score turned out to be a top in duplicate. At most of the other tables the East-West pairs incurred penalties on low contracts of spades and notrump.

Drop-Shoulder Yoke in the Back Lends 2-Piece Frock Chic Note

Pattern No. 869.

THE well-fitting two-piece frock has proved its value. All circles accept it as the practical and smart solution of the daytime clothes problem. But there are many variations of the two-piece dress. And this is the newest! It has a drop-shoulder yoke in the back—very unusual and attractive. A knotted scarf collar is a charmingly casual feature.

To bridge that awkward gap between seasons, this is the perfect frock. Flannel is a good fabric suggestion because there are still many chilly days ahead. But better select a not too somber shade so that you will catch that feeling of spring. The pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 20; 32 to 38. Complete yardage requirements are given on the pattern envelope.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I wish to offer a suggestion to the troubled foster mother who wrote to you last Thursday, signing herself "Anonymous." Two of my friends found themselves in circumstances similar to hers, in adopting an orphaned baby. They, too, realized they had a difficult problem to meet in adjusting their foster child to a healthy acceptance of the truth concerning his parentage.

• • • •

They felt the important thing was to convince the child he was loved and wanted by his foster parents. So they tell their child of the actors and actresses who have adopted babies, and at the same time are helping the child to make a scrapbook containing the pictures of famous adopted babies.

• • • •

Anything pleasant which comes to their attention in connection with adopted children is presented to the child in an attractive way, until they have instilled in their foster child a conviction that complete security and love surrounds adopted children.

• • • •

Their child is now 5 years old—the same age as "Anonymous" adopted son—and will probably learn soon the real facts concerning his parentage, without feeling a sense of shock or grief. K. D. T.

Avoid Dramatics.

DEAR K. D. T.: I am sure "Anonymous" will appreciate the spirit of helpfulness which prompted your letter. However, I can not but feel your friends are rather unnecessarily exaggerating the significance, either way, of being an adopted child. As I told "Anonymous," I believe the truth is best served in cases of this kind when imparted casually, with a minimum of dramatics.

• • • •

Without the slightest encouragement, the normal child has an egoistic tendency to dramatize himself out of all proportion to his essential significance in the cosmic scheme. Therefore, it is a wise parent who tactfully circumvents this proclivity. The process of orienting a child to the acceptance of himself as a small cog in the great wheel of life is called "socialization."

• • • •

The child who is schooled to a happy unawareness of self, through this process of socialization, is better prepared to meet life squarely than one who has been led to believe special privileges inhere in his particular state. The more closely a foster child identifies his foster parents, in his emotional imagery, with his flesh-and-blood parents, the greater his chances of satisfactory social adjustment. Tell him the truth, of course, and the sooner the better; but tell it lightly and simply and without fuss or furore. M. H.

Socialite Should Eschew Job Less Fortunate Sister May Need

By Malvina Lindsay,
(Woman's Page Editor.)

TRADE SEEMS to be making further inroads on the feminine smart set. New Yorkers have just discovered that a surprising number of the society debs and matrons listed in the 1935 social register are working as models, magazine agents, social secretaries, fashionists, operators of dress shops, publicity representatives, sellers of real estate—in short at almost anything that draws a pay check. The same situation prevails generally. The face you see on the society page Sunday is very likely to confront you in the ready-to-wear shop Monday.

• • • •

This economic trend has one value. Society undoubtedly will improve from its contact with trade, will lose much of its superficiality and snobbery. Its devotees, through the leveling experience of labor, will become broader-minded citizens. The passing of the professional society woman would be a loss civilization could well sustain.

• • • •

However, in a country that has recently had as many as 2,000,000 unemployed women, the question arises: Has the woman of means the right to take a job away from the woman who needs it for a living, who in about two cases out of three needs it also for the support of children or aged parents?

IT IS NO DOUBT true that some of the women in the social register group have been forced to go to work. In recent years imposing palaces have housed many economic tragedies. And very few women—despite one of man's fondest beliefs—work very long merely for the thrill of "doing something." Studies by the Woman's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor and the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs indicate that about two-thirds of women in business and professional life have family obligations. It is safe to assume that the great majority of the others are self-supporting.

• • • •

No one has any quarrel with the society woman who goes to work because she must do so in order to eat—or help others eat. Nor can one question the right to a professional career of the woman of means who has exceptional talent and who is willing to take the training, meet the professional requirements, endure the grind and work up fairly from the bottom in her chosen field. But every self-supporting working woman does question the right of society debutantes and matrons to jam up the economic field by playing around with jobs that other women need desperately.

• • • •

In most cases the social registerite takes a job because it is the smart thing to do, because she is out of beaux or bored with cocktail parties, because she needs a few extra dollars for clothes or gambling debts, or because she thinks the work would be "fascinating." And unfortunately she does not invade the pursuits in which training, struggle or the survival of the fittest are involved, but chisels in on those in which social entree or pull will give her an unfair advantage over more efficient competitors.

EMPLOYERS are partly to blame for this. Often they are dazzled by the social connections of a job applicant. Often they feel that the woman not actually in need will work contentedly for less than the one who has to pay rent and grocery bills. Often they are temporarily short-sighted enough to believe that style and social connections will atone for lack of training, incompetence and the general lowering of working standards.

• • • •

Employers who take this stand have no right to discriminate against the married woman worker, who in nine cases out of ten is working because of the inadequacy or the total lack of some man's income. If they can aid a social registerite to escape boredom and outfit herself for a Southern cruise, they can even more logically provide a bride the chance to earn money for furniture or a mother the opportunity to give her children better educational advantages.

• • • •

No one will deny that in an ideal society every one, including the social registerite and the street beggar, should have the right to a job. But society is not yet ideally organized. It is still in more or less of a mess and the well-to-do woman who wants an outlet for her talents and energies could do no better than to volunteer them toward the building of a better social order. If she must work, let her take up politics or social welfare on an unpaid basis. But she owes it to her more needy sister to keep out of the competitive economic field. It is a matter of noblesse oblige.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

ABOUT 75 years ago Thomas Addison, a distinguished British physician, described a disease which has since been known by his name. It is an affection of the adrenal glands, which lie in close proximity to the upper border of the kidneys.

The symptoms are the result of a deficiency of the hormone secreted by the cortex of the adrenals, and whenever they occur in a patient who has or has had tuberculosis we have reason to suspect Addison's disease. Anemia, fatigue, debility, frequent upsets of the stomach, and peculiar color changes (pigmentation of the skin) are present. In some cases the mucous membrane of the mouth will show irregular brown patches.

Weakness Common Manifestation.

Weakness is probably the commonest and most constant manifestation. The heart sounds are weak and the blood pressure is low. Nervous tendencies are marked and there is often mental irritability. The stomach symptoms vary from no appetite to active and persistent vomiting. The most striking characteristic, however, is the skin pigmentation, which is usually the sign that brings the patient to the physician. It is more frequently noted on a compressed area of the skin, for example, under tight belts, garters, shoestraps, etc. Whenever the disease is present in an advanced form pigmentation of the skin is so noticeable that diagnosis is easily made.

Inasmuch as the condition is due to disease or atrophy of the adrenal glands, supplying the secretion from these glands is the only method of treatment. To a limited degree it may be compared to supplying the secretion from the thyroid gland should that particular secretion be markedly deficient as, for example, in myxedema. Since the substance epinephrin has been obtained from the adrenals of animals it as been our chief reliance, plus a hormone obtained by Swingle and Pfiffner from the adrenal glands.

Another drug of great importance in the treatment of Addison's disease is know as ephedrin. This substance is derived from a plant and is closely related chemically to epinephrin. In certain cases ephedrin appears to have a marked advantage over that of adrenalin, as the effect lasts much longer.

Equal Rights Plan Indorsed By Federation

GATHERING on the eve of the birthday anniversary of Susan B. Anthony, who devoted her life to the cause of justice to women, the executive board of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs yesterday indorsed the proposed constitutional amendment, "That men and women have equal rights throughout the United States."

On presenting the subject, Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the D. C. Federation, declared the amendment is needed because of the growth of centralized government, because of the plight of German women, and because American women "need to have their constitutional rights buttressed as never before."

Miss Pollitzer Speaks.

She then introduced two representatives of the National Woman's Party who further explained the need of the amendment.

Miss Anita Pollitzer, vice chairman, said the amendment would benefit not only women but all mankind and that it would be of great help in keeping a democratic system alive in a world when democratic ideals are being challenged. She then read two letters urging indorsement of the amendment. These were from Miss Annie W. Goodrich, dean emeritus of the Yale University School of Nursing, and Dr. M. Carey Thomas, president emeritus of Bryn Mawr College.

Miss Greathouse Voices Plea.

Voicing her plea for indorsement, Miss Rebekah Greathouse, secretary of the National Woman's Party, explained that the equal rights amendment would put women into the Constitution, and would strike down shackles the common law places upon them, and would mean every woman shall hold her life, liberty and property under the protection of the general rules governing other human beings.

The birth control bill also was indorsed by the board. Mrs. Wiley presented Dr. Bessie L. Moses, in charge of the contraceptive clinic at Johns Hopkins University, who pointed out the advantages of birth control legislation.

A resolution providing for a study of the amendment granting votes for the District was also passed.

Dorothy Stone 'Adores' Gardening, Shuns Kitchen

DOROTHY STONE, truly a daughter of the stage, admits she has "other interests."

Fred Stone's Charming Daughter Liked 'Mimi' Role Best.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"NATURALLY, I GOT my stage start because of my father," admitted Dorothy Stone, dancing - singing - acting daughter of the famous musical comedy star, Fred Stone.

"Without him, regardless of talent, getting my first role would have been a struggle. But with his name—and, incidentally, a show, 'Stepping Stones,' in which he was the star—I had no difficulty getting on. It was staying on that was hard, staying on and trying to live up to what people expected of me as my father's daughter."

These confessions Miss Stone made as she sat before the mirror in her dressing room, shook back her short blonde hair, pinned it down and applied lipstick.

Instead of the flowing satin robe one visualizes a star as donning for her dressing room scene, Miss Stone wore cotton lounging pajamas, obviously a little briefer for repeated laundering and a tea-rose combing-jacket with no claim at all to loveliness.

Glamorous Behind Footlights.

Apparently this charming actress goes glamorous only behind the footlights. Backstage she is simply a charming person who impresses you because she deosn't try; who is easy to talk with because she is natural, and who can discuss many things besides her current role.

"I don't have much spare time from my work, but I do have lots of other interests," she said, as she rolled her hair into tiny curls and pinned them close to her head so the wig would fit.

What were some of her interests? Parties?

She shook her head and smiled. "Not parties," she said. "I don't like them at all. In fact, I dislike going anywhere where there are many people. I detest crowds—that is, crowds that aren't audiences. What I enjoy most," she said finally, "is being alone."

Enjoys Family Life.

By "being alone," she explained, she meant being with her husband, her parents or her sisters.

"That's why I have such a good time in my home in Forest Hills," she went on. "I can be alone . . . and relax . . . and think. Of course that doesn't mean I spend all my time, even there, doing nothing. I find plenty to keep me busy."

What, for example? Did she have any domestic aptitudes? Did she, in simpler words, like to cook?

"No," she said quickly; then her voice rippled off into a chuckle. "Anna does my cooking." (She waved a hand toward her maid who at that moment was hanging up the flowing white dress Miss Stone wears as "Barbara Hutton"). "And I never sew, even for amusement. But I adore gardening. You should see my plants in Forest Hills. My husband likes to garden, too, but of course we don't have much time for anything but the stage."

Husband Playing in London.

(She is married to Charles Collins who is now playing in London.)

The discussion turned back to the theater and Miss Stone mentioned some of her favorite roles.

"Best of all was 'Mimi' in 'The Gay Divorcee,'" she said. "I never enjoyed anything on the stage more than the 'Night-and-Day' dance with Fred Astaire. That was my greatest thrill, to date."

With only three days to rehearse, she stepped into the part previously played by Claire Luce.

"I'm just living—theatrically speaking—until I can get another role as good as that one," she said. "This show (she was talking of 'As Thousands Cheer') isn't half as thrilling from my point of view. But, of course, I enjoy almost anything on the stage."

A knock at the door and a call of "Five minutes" announced it was almost time for the show to begin. Now completely made up and bewigged, she slipped out of the cotton pajamas into the white dress.

As the reporter turned to leave, the actress looked up from fastening her dress to smile graciously. The kind of a smile that makes you remember Dorothy Stone—not as an actress, not even as the daughter of Fred Stone, but as a very pleasant person, as charming off, as on the stage.

Exchange Plan On U. S., Japan Students Urged

Sen. Thomas Would Foster Good Will, End War Talk, Distrust.

(Associated Press.)

An interchange of students with Japan was proposed yesterday by Senator Thomas (Democrat), Utah, as a means of bringing about a better and "necessary understanding" between the two countries.

Otherwise, Thomas, who spent five years as a teacher in Japan, said, he feared that distrust between the two nations would grow until it brought war within ten years.

The quiet-spoken Utah Democrat said such a conflict would be "the bloodiest ever known to the world."

The Senator criticized the United States exclusion act under which Japanese are forbidden entry into this country as "ruthless and foolish."

If Congress had placed Japan on a small quota basis, as are numerous other nations, the Japanese would not have resented the action as a direct insult, he said.

He suggested Congress provide an annual appropriation for five years to bring deserving Japanese students to United States universities and colleges. It would, through the State Department, ask Japan to make similar provisions for financing students from the United States in Japanese institutions of higher learning.

Cites War Rumors.

"On every hand—in newspapers, magazines, and even in the halls of Congress—we hear of defenses, armies and navies and rumors of war, when we should be hearing only of plans for peace," the Senator said.

"We hear of building a navy 'second to none,' we hear of a $26,000,000 building program for defenses in Hawaii, and that is only a start; proposals for a $100,000,000 air-defense program, fortification of Alaska and the chain of Aleutian Islands," Thomas added, "but little about creating sentiment for peace—except from a small minority—while jingoists go on spreading their propaganda of hatred and distrust in both nations."

The Utah Senator said at least 10,000 students from the Oriental nation could study here for four years each "at a total cost of but slightly more than one battleship."

Meanwhile additional hydrographic and aerological surveys of the Aleutian Islands area will be conducted, it was stated yesterday at the Navy Department. Six vessels of the Mine Force, the Oglala, Quail, Tanager, Kingfisher, Gannett and Sandpiper, will undertake the work.

Commander Francis Cogswell, U. S. N., commanding officer of the Oglala will be in charge of the expedition. The ships will be outfitted for the work on the West Coast and will leave for the survey area early in May.

Collusion Laid To Gen. Farley By Huey Long

Linked With Sale of Materials as Kingfish Renews His Attack.

(Associated Press.)

Resuming his fight for an investigation of Postmaster General Farley's official conduct, Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, contended in the Senate yesterday that the Cabinet officer had violated three Federal statues and possibly a fourth in connection with Government financing of the Hillside home development project in New York, and other acts.

Long repeated the charge that Farley was interested in the sale of materials for Government projects through the General Building Supply Corporation, and called attention to the law prohibiting this.

"If Farley is not fit to be Postmaster General he's not fit to be chairman of the Democratic party," Long said, adding he would "not accept the compromise" in bills providing that Farley give up either his Cabinet post or the party chairmanship.

A resolution asking Secretary Ickes to submit to the Senate any information collected by his investigative bureau on Farley was introduced by Long.

The resolution would ask Ickes to send to the Senate all reports or other data collected by Louis Glavis, head of the Bureau of Investigation, in connection with the public building program, and particularly anything dealing with Farley, "or any concern with which he is identified."

It asked especially for any reports on contracts involving James Steward & Co. or the General Building Supply Corporation.

When Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri, objected to the resolution Long moved to suspend the rules, then talked for the rest of the day before withdrawing the motion.

Poison Dose Proves Fatal to Man, 45

Frank Upton, 45, of the 500 block of Fifth street northeast, died yesterday in Gallinger Hospital from the effects of poison he swallowed while walking near the White House Monday.

Physicians said Upton walked into Emergency Hospital and announced he had taken poison. After first-aid treatment, he was transferred to Gallinger.

Indian Affairs Abruptly Halted By Two Mysterious Commas

A Grammarian's Funeral Knell Sounds as House Committee Asks Plaintively, Who Put Those Distressing Punctuations in Act?

A couple of interloping commas have brought the country's Indian business to a full stop, the Associated Press says.

The distressing emergency was revealed yesterday at a special conference on the Wheeler-Howard act to give Indians self-government.

Plaintively observed Chairman Rogers (Democrat), Oklahoma, of the House Indian Affairs Committee: "We have tried to find out how those commas got in the bill and have not been able to."

Nathan R. Margold, Interior Department solicitor, whose opinions on the commas precipitated the crisis, took refuge in "the elementary grammatical rule" about commas—this kind anyway.

Grammarians were summoned to parse the comma-containing sentence, which now reads as follows:

"This act shall not apply to any reservation wherein a majority of the adult Indians, voting at a special election duly called by the Secretary of the Interior, shall vote against its application."

The comma question developed into two angles: Who put them in, and what did they make the sentence mean?

Chairman Rogers' theory was that "they inadvertently crept in without the knowledge of the committee."

What made the matter more than a grammarian's funeral was the fact that some 5,000 Indians are now being governed under the Wheeler-Howard act who would be outside it if there weren't any commas.

The commas, Margold said, meant that "a majority" of all eligible Indians was required to veto the act's application. Without the commas, he said, only a majority of those voting would be required to veto the act.

Bills Amend Health Laws In Maryland

One Gives Board Power to Adopt Rules Approved by U. S.

Toll Fees on 2 Bridges Also Proposed to Legislature.

Annapolis, Feb. 14 (Spl.).—Three bills amending the State health laws and two measures designed to exact tolls on at least two bridges and conferring additional powers upon building and homestead associations, were among new proposals offered in the Maryland General Assembly today.

Meanwhile eleven bills drafted by the Federal Public Works Administration designed to change Maryland laws to enable communities to take complete advantage of Federal proposals were received from Washington. These measures were turned over to Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, who remarked that several of them imposed too rigorous demands.

The bridge toll proposals were presented by Senator Richard S. Dodson, Talbot County. One would place a fee on the Susquehanna River bridge between Havre de Grace and Perryville, while the other affects the Conowingo span. The revenue would be used to retire bonds issued for bridge construction work. The rate of tolls proposed is: passenger cars, 50 cents, and 5 cents for each passenger, motorcycles, 25 cents and 5 cents for each driver and passenger; commercial vehicles, 75 cents to $1.

Widens B. & L. Group's Power.

The bills enlarging powers of building and homestead associations were introduced by Senator George Hofferbert, Baltimore City, and Delegate Leo Griesacker. They would permit such organizations to take advantage of the Federal national housing act. Besides participating in general provisions of that act, the classes of securities in which associations would be allowed to invest funds would be enlarged to include State bonds and obligations of the Federal Government. Emergency provisions granted by the State law of 1933 are extended two years.

Delegate Richard M. Baker, Baltimore City, sponsored the bills amending the health laws governing adulteration of food and drugs. One grants the health board power to adopt regulations approved by the secretary of the Federal Department of Agriculture; another provides that in classes of food and drugs not already standardized by the United States Pharmacopeia, regulations and standards used by the Federal secretary shall be followed, and the third broadens the term "misbranding" to include all articles if the package or label bears any statement, design or device regarding the therapeutic effect of the articles which is false or misleading.

It was learned that the Senate Finance Committee had voted unanimously in favor of the Veasey bill imposing a tax of 3.25 cents a gallon on beer, although the report was not officially made today.

The Senate passed the bill by Harry Legore, Frederick County, placing in the hands of the county commissioners distribution of fees collected from liquor licenses outside of incorporated towns of the county, hitherto awarded directly to the children's aid. The change in the law is by mutual agreement and the fees will go to children's aid work just the same.

Other Bills Introduced.

Other bills introduced today in the Senate:

By Robert B. Kimble, Allegany County—Regulating the number of men required as crews of trains operated in the State.

By Harry Legore, Frederick County—Providing a penalty for unlawful sale of personal property covered by chattel mortgage.

By Robert V. Cooksey, Charles County—Increasing the speed limit of motor vehicles from 40 to 45 miles an hour.

By Joseph A. Coad, St. Marys County—Authorizing the board of public works to sell any realty owned by the State. Senator Coad explained that this measure has no bearing upon the proposal to sell the State's annuity in the Northern Central Railway.

By John G. Callan, Baltimore City—Resolution requesting Gov. Nice to restore pay cuts sustained by those State employes in the lower brackets.

A bill introduced in the House by Charles C. Marbury, Prince George's County—Extending jurisdiction of courts of equity in applications for adoption of infants by residents of Federal-controlled property in the State.

Funeral of John Kurtz To Be Conducted Today

Accident, Md., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—John Kurtz, 68, of Johnstown, Pa., died suddenly early yesterday at his farm at McHenry, near here, after an illness of four weeks of pneumonia. His body was taken to Johnstown, where funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at the Catholic Church of Visitation. Mr. Kurtz had engaged in the meat business at Johnstown and also was manager of a coal company. He purchased the stock farm at McHenry and bought and sold cattle and sheep on a large scale. He was twice married and is survived by his second wife, the former Miss Nora Savidge, of McHenry, and a son, 14 months old. Mr. Kurtz was one of fourteen children.

Data Is Offered In Cecil Voting Fraud Charges

Andrews, Loser in Court Clerk Race, Gives Evidence.

Elkton, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—S. Ralph Andrews, of Elkton, who was defeated by one vote in November for reelection as clerk of the Circuit Court of Cecil County, today presented his evidence before Police Magistrate Manly Drennen to substantiate his claim there were irregularities at the polls.

Counterclaims on behalf of Walter E. Buck of Port Deposit, who was elected to the office on the Democratic ticket, are to be offered at a hearing next Thursday. Andrews claimed the irregularities occurred in the Fair Hill District and at one district in Elkton.

F. Russell Ewing, a Democratic clerk at Fair Hill, testified the ballots were taken out of the polling place for four people, who were cripples and could not leave their automobiles.

Walter Lawrence, a ballot judge at the same precinct, said he had objected to two ballots, one of which was blurred and on the other the "x" was hooked at the bottom so the two lines met. He added he was overruled by the other judges on the latter. He could not say for whom the ballots were cast.

Ralph Caldwell, a checker at an Elkton booth for Harold E. Cobourn, Democrat, who was elected State Senator, asserted he remembered hearing two ballots, marked for Andrews called out for Buck.

Caldwell also said the counting stopped when the room got cold and George Blade was sworn in as a tally clerk when Rand Miller the appointed clerk, was taken ill.

Bills Proposed On Laurel Rule

Kent Introduces Four Measures in House at Annapolis.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 14.—Delegate Kent R. Mullikin, veteran member of the Prince Georges County delegation in the House, chairman of the ways and means committee and floor leader, today introduced a quartet of bills embracing local legislation for Laurel.

Postponement until 1938 of the supplemental registration of voters authorized by a previous law for 1936, and calling for a general registration that year, is provided in one of the measures.

The other proposals are designed to:

Authorize the mayor and city council by ordinance to change the six-month period in which water may be turned off for nonpayment of water rents, reassess the license fees on business of the city and fix the costs against property sold at tax sales.

The county delegation backed a bill to clarify the laws of Colmar Manor by giving that town and Cottage City concurrent police jurisdiction over sections of the Washington boulevard lying between the two communities.

Death Claims Justice Epes In Richmond

Prince William County Native Appointed to Post in 1929.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 14 (AP).—Justice Louis S. Epes, of the State Supreme Court of Appeals, died shortly after 6 o'clock tonight following an unexpected heart attack in his office at the State Capitol.

Justice Epes, a native of Prince William County, who previously was a member of the State Corporation Commission, was appointed to the bench of the highest State court by Gov. Byrd in November, 1929, filling a vacancy caused by the death of Justice Jesse F. West, of Suffolk.

His place on the corporation commission was filled by appointment to the post of the present Governor, George C. Peery.

Graduated From W. and L.

Coming from a family long prominent in Southside Virginia, Justice Epes was the son of the Rev. Theodrick Prior Epes and Mrs. Joana Spencer Epes. He was graduated with the highest honors in his class at Hampden-Sydney and again at Washington and Lee University, where he took his law degree.

Taking up the practice of law in Blackstone, he specialized in corporation law and after serving in the Army in 1918 was elected to the State Senate the following year. In that body he served on the finance, auditing and education committees and after being reelected to the Senate decided to run for the State Corporation Commission, which then was chosen by election.

Filled Unexpired Term.

After winning his election to the commission he took up his service as a member of the body prematurely by appointment to fill the unexpired term of Judge William F. Rea.

During the bond issue fight in the State Mr. Epes played a prominent part as one of the advocates of the pay-as-you-go plan.

In November 5, 1914, he married Miss Julia Pegram Bagley.

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and of Omicron Delta Kappa, campus leadership fraternity, and was a member of the board of trustees of Washington and Lee University.

He was 53 years of age and is survived by his widow and by a daughter, Miss Julia Bagley Epes.

Cure for Depression Offered by Soulsaver

In a small triangular room in the Continental Hotel a thin little man with a large head of long, white hair as fine and glossy as silk thread, was delivering a sermon yesterday.

The bed was his pulpit, his congregation a couple of fellows who dropped in.

"I have a cure for the depression," he said, and from a Gideon Bible he read a verse from Chronicles.

The Rev. George Bennard hadn't intended to preach. He had, in fact, promised he wouldn't.

But preach he did, becouse he couldn't help it; because for 20 years he has traveled the length and breadth of the land doing nothing else, intensely, sincerely, and because everyone has a cure for the depression and talks about it.

"Once we turn from our worship of material things to the consideration of things of the spirit, our losses will seem trivial and prosperity will return. And unless we do this, we are headed for the greatest catastrophe the world has ever known."

The Rev. Mr. Bennard is a Methodist. His church is the Nation. One hundred and twenty-eight million souls are his congregation. He is, in short, an itinerant soul saver, a "sky pilot." For the next two weeks his pulpit will be in a small church in Union Bridge, Md.

You're wrong if you think of the Rev. Mr. Bennard as another Billy Sunday. And twice wrong if you think of Aimee McPherson. The Rev. Mr. Bennard saves souls. But he keeps it dignified. No histrionics. No press agents.

The Rev. Mr. Bennard steers a middle course, neither stiff and formal, nor gaudy and "jazzy."

"I just go where I am called and preach the word of God as I see it."

Furthermore, the Rev. Mr. Bennard is a poet, a sacred poet, the author of "The Rugged Cross," which has been voted the most popular hymn in America, sung more often than "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Lead, Kindly Light," "Rock of Ages" or "Onward, Christian Soldier."

The Rev. Mr. Bennard preaches sometimes as many as three sermons a day. In his spare time he writes hymns, which come to him as he falls asleep at night, or as he wakes up in the morning. He guesses he's written as many as 125 hymns, delivered 10,000 sermons.

Last Veteran Pedagogue Dies, Piedmont's Alumnae Disband

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.). The purpose for which it was organized having been accomplished, the Piedmont Alumnae Association has held its last meeting in Meade Hall, parish house of Christ Episcopal Church, and disbanded.

Seventeen years ago the former pupils of this widely known boarding school formed an association to contribute to the happiness and comfort of the four sisters who taught in the school for a long term of years—the Misses Lucy, Mary, Margaret and Hallie Meade, daughters of the late Rev. Richard Meade, for many years rector of Christ Episcopal Church, and granddaughters of the Right Rev. William Meade, third Bishop of Virginia, who died March 14, 1862.

Disbanding of the association followed the death of the last of the sisters, Miss Margaret Wilmer Meade, on January 5.

Piedmont Female Institute was for more than half a century the leading girls' school in Piedmont Virginia. It was organized in 1850 by two sisters, the Misses Anne and Jane Leaton. Soon after the Civil War the former married the Rev. Richard Meade.

While principally a school for girls, the institution had a junior department for boys, many of whom affiliated with the alumnae association, which at one time had a membership of over 600, scattered in nearly every State and in many foreign counties.

Among the living alumni are Dr. Hugh Young, of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore; Dr. William Wilmer, of Washington, D. C.; Judge Allan R. Hanckel, of Norfolk; Dr. David H. Lyman, head of a large sanatorium at Wallingford, Conn.; Dr. William E. Bold, of Long Island, N. Y.; Judge Dallas Flannagan, of Montclair, N. J., and Dr. Josiah Thornley, of New York City.

Miss Pearl Willey Wed.

Cambridge, Md., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—Ernest Tieder, one of the outstanding athletes at the Cambridge High School last year, and Miss Pearl Willey were married yesterday at the parsonage of St. Paul's Methodist Protestant Church, with the Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Mulligan officiating.

Nice Names H. C. Jones Jobs Chief

War Memorial Head Picked to Succeed Oliver Short.

Takes the Oath After His Unexpected Appointment.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—Col. Harry C. Jones, chairman of the War Memorial Commission, and former chairman of the Baltimore City Service Commission, today was sworn in as State employment commissioner by Gov. Harry W. Nice.

Col. Jones succeeds Oliver C. Short, who recently resigned to accept a Federal appointment. He will qualify tomorrow before Stephen C. Little, clerk of the Superior Court of Baltimore, and take office immediately.

Gov. Nice had considered appointing Thomas B. R. Mudd, of Charles County, former Federal immigration commissioner, to the position.

Summons Col. Jones.

Late today, however, Col. Jones was summoned to Annapolis and given the office. He was sworn in by the Governor in the executive office.

"The Governor has honored me with appointment as State employment commissioner of Maryland and I shall do my best to justify his confidence," Col. Jones said after the oath had been administered. "The high standard achieved by the State merit system under my predecessor will be maintained, and if possible, improved."

In announcing the appointment, Gov. Nice said:

"My selection of Col. Jones for this important post evidences my appreciation of the necessity of having as administrative head of the State merit system an official who is not only in sympathy with the spirit of the Maryland civil service statutes, but is adequately equipped by experience, training and public confidence, to perform the duties of the office efficiently.

"Col. Jones possesses all these qualifications to an exceptional degree.

"In Efficient Hands."

"As a colleague of Mr. Edwin A. Baetjer on the first city service commission, to which Mayor William A. Broening appointed the colonel in 1921, he aided in laying the foundation for the present highly successful municipal merit system.

"Succeeding Mr. Baetjer as chairman of the commission in 1922, and reappointed by Mayor Jackson in 1926, Col. Jones served on the commission for nine years in all, seven as its president, and until his appointment by Mayor Broening, in his second term, to the port development commission, necessitated his retirement from the merit body.

"Throughout Col. Jones' administration of the municipal merit system he had the fullest support and commendation, not only of the press, but of the Civil Service Reform League and other organizations interested in civic betterment.

"The merit system will continue in efficient hands."

Beal admitted eight robberies and five larcenies. Makowski admitted participating in the hold-ups and larcenies, but denied using a gun. The judge commended police who made the arrest while the two men were sitting in a car waiting for a hold-up victim.

Honor Student's Daily School Trek Totals 18 Miles

Parsons, W. Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.). David Price, of Clover district, the only freshman to make the honor roll, walks 9 miles to and from Parsons High School daily. He is up at 5 a. m. and is off an hour later, reaching the school shortly after 8, covering the 9 miles in a little over two hours. It takes him just a little longer to return over the stretch of dirt road.

During the week of semester examinations, he covered the 18 miles while the mercury was below zero and he was so cold some mornings that he was unable to take his "exams" until he had "thawed out." He completed his elementary course in a one-room school in Clover district three years before entering school here last September.

Growers Fight Plans to Unify Transit Lines

West Virginia Society Asks Just Rates for Fruit, Produce.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.). Opposition to a proposal for an all-inclusive coordination of transportation facilities under the I. C. C., unless horticultural and agricultural products are given exemption, was expressed by the West Virginia Horticultural Society in the business session closing its forty-second annual meeting here this afternoon. The action was taken in the form of a resolution adopted upon recommendation of the committee.

The resolution also called for "just and equitable freight rates on horticultural and agricultural products," opposed any additional tax or other burdens on out-of-State trucks, urged enforcement of the crop-pest law, approved operations of the Frazier-Lemke law permitting consolidation of debts for distressed farmers, urged application of works relief funds to the improvement of secondary road systems, and asked that any wages paid in rural communities in relief programs be confined to the prevailing wages in agriculture.

The growers previously had expressed fears that in any transportation consolidation system the rates for trucking would be raised to the existing rail rates against which growers also complain in resolutions.

Originally designed as a public service . . . . sidewalk racks have become a public nuisance

● And that is why The POST goes off the racks Monday, February 18

● Here are the comments of Washington's civic, religious and educational leaders on The POST'S new policy

DR. GRACE HAYS RILEY, President, Washington College of Law.

"This move is important, to my mind, in that it will provide employment for honest carriers and at the same time restore in another way a convenient purchasing method for the public. I feel that the honor system failed as much through carelessness on the part of adults as through intentional dishonesty among youngsters."

COL. LESLIE C. GARNETT, U. S. Attorney for the District.

"Removal of the street newspaper sale boxes takes away the temptation of petty theft and will aid immeasurably to the employment of newsboys. You know, most of our Presidents have been newsboys."

"There is no doubt that the present rack system offers boys on the streets an opportunity for petty theft and, although it will be inconvenient personally to me, a consistent rack buyer, I heartily approve of The Post's action."

THE REV. J. C. BALL, Pastor, Metropolitan Baptist Church.

"I approve heartily of your new plan. It not only saves the situation, but also gives an increased number of Washington boys a chance to earn money honestly."

THE REV. J. H. HOLLISTER, Pastor, Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church.

"The removal of The Washington Post from the street racks is a very fine thing in my estimation. I also think that the interest which The Post is showing in its carrier boys most commendable."

"The Washington Post is making a very fine move in taking the paper off the street racks. I was once a newsboy myself and know how anxious the boys are to make a little extra money. This plan will do much to smother dishonesty."

MRS. L. B. CASTELL, President, D. C. Parent-Teacher Association.

"Facts seem to indicate that these honor boxes present temptation to both children and adults, leading them to become dishonest. I am glad to hear of their discontinuance by The Post."

DR. COLEMAN W. NEVILS, President, Georgetown University.

RABBI ABRAM SIMON, Washington Hebrew Congregation.

"What was originally installed as a convenience has unfortunately turned out to be a misfortune. I believe it would be wise for all Washington newspapers to agree to discontinue this practice."

"I approve cordially of your new policy to withdraw The Post from street racks, thereby removing possible temptation to dishonesty from our youth and, at the same time, providing additional employment for boys who wish to demonstrate their self respect and willingness to work."

DR. FRANK W. BALLOU, Superintendent of Washington Public Schools.

"In my opinion the move is a very desirable one, since it removes temptation from weak people and increases the possibility of boys doing honest work in the sale of newspaper."

"I have felt all along that these newspaper racks put too great a temptation in the way of children and that there is no possible way of checking the success or failure of such an 'honor system' as this constitutes."

"I have been opposed to these racks ever since they were installed. Such administrators of juvenile justice as Judge Sellers have for years agreed with me that the entire policy is wrong and that newspaper should sell through stores and honest carrier boys and should not set up on street corners this temptation to dishonest boys to steal both the papers and cash."

DR. L. A. ALDERMAN, Director of Education, Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

"I feel that this is an important move and a necessary one toward giving employment to honest news carriers and removing temptation from dishonest ones."

DR. GEORGE W. WOODS, Dean, College of Liberal Arts, the American University.

"The Post is to be commended upon taking this step, which I feel sure is in the right direction. I have felt for years that it was wrong for this temptation to be placed openly before young boys."

LINN C. DRAKE, Scout Executive, Boy Scouts of America D. C. Council.

"I believe that it is in the interests of character development for bo to remove the temptation of the racks. The Post's action will save ma boys from committing what the law regards as a crime."

MARY T. NORTON, Representative from New Jersey, Chairman of the House District Committee.

"In this time, when so many boys are seeking a chance to make living, I am glad to see The Post give them a better opportunity."

JENNINGS RANDOLPH, Representative from West Virginia, Chairman of the District Crime Investigation Committee.

"It should prove a healthy experiment in that it will place more responsibility on the newsboys and better equip them for business."

THE REV. EDWARD BUCKEY, Pastor, Saint Matthew's Church.

"I think that The Post is making a very fine move in aiding the newsboys in Washington and also in depressing dishonesty. The papers which are scattered over the streets from these news racks are an eyesore."

DR. CLOYD HECK MARVIN, President, George Washington University.

"I am not an authority on the moral or ethical issues involved, but if only considered from an esthetic point of view, The Post is to be congratulated on its action to remove from the streets the newsstand racks."

DR. MAURICE SHEEHY, Assistant to the Rector, the Catholic University of America.

"The new plan of The Washington Post, which will remove temptation from some weaker boys and give employment to other deserving youngsters, has my hearty approval."

MAJOR ERNEST W. BROWN, Superintendent of Police.

"I never was in favor of the rack system for the distribution of newspapers. Not only do the racks form obstructions on the sidewalks, but they are a constant temptation to children and grown-ups alike. The Post is to be commended for its action. Children charged with taking papers from these racks without depositing money have long been a problem of our juvenile court."

Margaret Sullavan Brings "The Good Fairy" to Keith Screen as Lively Farce

Molnar Work Assumes a New Guise as Film

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE GOOD FAIRY," Universal picturization of the stage play by Ferenc Molnar, adapted to the screen by Preston Sturges, starring Margaret Sullavan, with Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan and Reginald Owen. Directed by William Wyler. Previewed Monday midnight.

Universal production executives here give evidence of having met with surprising success in transmuting one of Ferenc Molnar's most wistful and most imaginative comedy-romances into a tempestuous farce, characterized by cyclonic action and stentorian dialogue.

This is not out of keeping with the new treatment the play has been accorded. Instead of picking up the story at the point of its inception in the dramatic version, presented on the stage by Helen Hayes and Walter Connolly, the film translation discovers Luisa Ginglebusher as rather the prize inmate of an orphan asylum where she is the mentor of the large group of younger charges.

Schlapkohl, one day, visits the institution in search of likely "usherettes" for his cinema palace, the most ornate amusement place in Budapest. He chooses Luisa as a single "sample" of the type of employe the orphanage may be able to supply. And then his troubles and hers begin. For Detlaff, the waiter from the smartest hotel in town, is a movie fan.

The Usher Takes a Husband.

He encounters Luisa and, being a disarmingly transparent soul, inspires her confidence to such an extent that she passes herself off, in a moment of crisis, as Mrs. Detlaff. That is how it all started. Detlaff, you see, was susceptible to the charm of lovely young women, even from orphanages. So he becames mildly attached to Luisa.

So does a business tycoon, who happens upon her in Detlaff's hotel one gala night, when the smitten servitor has spirited her in, garbed in a gorgeous gown not too discreetly "borrowed" from among the costumes for one of the theater's prologues.

This chance meeting with Konrad, the millionaire, was providential. It made possible the carrying out of Luisa's pledge to do a good deed each day. Finding herself in another romantic predicament, since Detlaff, her first "husband" is known to Konrad only as a menial, Luisa assumes another helpmeet, whom she plucks from the telephone book by a system comparable to that of picking winners at the track by sticking a pin through the back of the racing program. This beneficiary of her "good fairy" guardian angelship proves to be an indigent and obscure lawyer who dreams of the day when his strict adherence to "an ethical standard" shall bring him both wealth and renown.

A Real "Good Deed."

This happens much quicker than he has ever dared hope, once Luisa sets about doing him one of her "good deeds." Konrad, believing him the husband of the young woman with whom he has become madly smitten, showers riches, eminence and title, an advance of 10,000 kronen and everything else that possibly could fulfill the wildest aspirations of a suburban nonentity.

In the end, of course, the bubble bursts. Konrad discovers the manner and degree of his bilking, the waiter has his eyes opened, the lawyer decides that the world is a fake and only Luisa and Konrad manage to keep any sort of perspective on the events of a hectic day or two. The former decides really to become Mrs. Dr. Max Sporum, and Konrad makes up his mind that Sporum, after all, will be a big help in his business.

That, in essence, may be said to represent a fair skeleton of the plot of the original Molnar play. All the difference between it and the picture lies in the farcical treatment that has been accorded the film in contrast with the delightfully naive quality of the whimsical little drama that was revealed upon the stage under the deft ministrations of Miss Hayes and Mr. Connolly.

Marshall Plays Sanely.

It is a little difficult to reconcile Herbert Marshall with a role for which Walter Connolly seemed extraordinarily equipped. In the present rendering of the story Mr. Marshall is quite all right as the broken-down barrister who snatches happiness out of a seemingly total defeat of every precept to which he has so stanchly pledged his professional ardor. He plays with more restraint, more sanity and less haste than any other member of the cast, with the possible exception of Miss Sullavan.

Miss Sullavan is a distinctive and slightly unique personality, whether on stage or screen. Her voice, her diction, her utter naturalness are strictly her own, unapproached by any other player in seductive quality, precision and complete charm. All of these admirable endowments are given full play in "The Good Fairy." Miss Sullavan's performance is graced by many attributes that will commend it to discerning picturegoers.

Frank Morgan Scores.

Frank Morgan, as the distraught distrait Konrad, lends the action a great part of its humorous appeal. Mr. Morgan seldom finds it quite possible to complete a sentence, but in his bewilderment brings to the screen one of the most effective—even if at times the noisiest and most fluttery—characterizations he ever has contributed to an enterprise of which the purpose primarily is to be comic. Reginald Owen, as Detlaff, the waiter, may be bracketed along with Mr. Morgan as one of the picture's mainsprings of hilarity.

The whole thing has been done on rather a grandiose scale, with Alan Hale, Beulah Bondi, Cesar Romero, Eric Blore and numerous others contributing their bits to a lively and uncurbed entertainment.

The Pathe News and the held-over "Goddess of Spring," Silly Symphony in natural colors, complete a bill that should meet with great popular favor, even if it will offend slightly those who cherish fragrant memories of "The Good Fairy," as Molnar wrote it.

So now, apparently, it can be told with at least an outside chance of sticking until this gets into print. I mean the order in which pictures already announced actually will be presented at RKO-Keith's Theater once "The Good Fairy" gets out of their way. "The Good Fairy," then, will continue its run on Fifteenth street until Washington's Birthday, February 22. On that date, the Molnar play will be succeeded by Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon in London Films' picturization of the Baroness Orczy's novel of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," now in its second week at the Radio City Music Hall in New York. The RKO-Radio film version of Jerome Kern's musical comedy, "Roberta," starring Irene Dunne, with Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire and a notable cast, will follow "Pimpernel." And there you have it the way it has just been given to us, in keeping with yesterday's promise.

Pardon My Yawn!

If you are contemplating a visit to Loew's Fox Theater this early morning to attend that sunrise, breakfast premiere of "After Office Hours," starring Clark Gable and Constance Bennett, you will be interested to know that the box-office and doors will be open to the public at 6 a. m. Service of the continental breakfast included in the 35 cent price of admission will begin at the same hour, with a sufficient number of waiters to supply coffee, doughnuts and toast to four lines of hungry customers, cafeteria fashion.

At 6:30 a. m., Johnny Salb, one of the Capital's ace pipe organists, will begin an organ recital that will continue until the showing of a Chic Sale short-reel comedy at 7:11 a. m.

At 7:20 a. m., "After Office Hours" will be publicly screened for the first time anywhere in the world.

So now you know. I might drop in myself on my way home to bed! How's about a cups scoffee, Mr. Barron? Or what have you?

"Goodbye Again" has been selected by Cue and Curtain of George Washington University as the second production of its season. This sprightly comedy will be remembered as a vehicle for the versatile talents of Osgood Perkins two seasons ago, when it was rated among the season's ten best plays. It was written by Allen Scott and George Haight and will be directed for the local group by Harold A. Weinberger, former director for the Drama Guild and last summer's Roadside Theater.

More About "L'Aiglon."

Lee Shubert's production of "L'Aiglon," starring Eva Le Gallienne, which it was stated in this space yesterday will be a mid-March booking at the National Theater, is an adaptation of the original Rostand play arranged for Miss Le Gallienne's use by Clemence Dane, the celebrated English playwright.

Richard Addinsell has composed a special musical score that will be used throughout the action of the drama. The settings are by Aline Bernstein and represent the salon of a villa of Marie Louise at Baden, the Duke apartment in the palace at Schoenbrunn, the park at Schoenbrunn, the battlefield of Wagram and the bedchamber of the Duke at Reichstadt.

The company is a large one and includes Leona Roberts, Merle Maddern, Walter Beck, Donald Cameron, Sayne Crawley, Marion Evensen, Paul Leyssac, Averell Harris, Helen Walpole and Florida Frieburg.

Sudden illness has compelled the cancellation of Everett Marshall's engagement at Loew's Fox Theater beginning tomorrow as headliner of the stage portion of the program. In place of the eminent barytone, a last-minute booking will bring Lita Grey Chaplin, divorced wife of the cinema's greatest pantomimist, to the F street cathedral in the ace vaudeville spot. The remainder of the bill remains unchanged.

Making-Ends-Meet Note.

Is it permissible on a day like this to impress a few unsoiled Xmas cards, left over from the late Yuletide season, into service as valentines?

Sorry, but that being the case, you're just out of luck, that's all!

Here Today and Coming Tomorrow

On March 7, a class will be initiated in honor of Frederick N. Zihlman, former Representative in Congress and past supreme dictator of the order, who will be present. The class to be named for Gov. Nice will be initiated about a month later.

Jeweler said he was a passenger in Himmelfarb's car November 7, 1934, when he suffered the injuries. Attorneys L. H. Shapiro and Henry Snyder represent him.

The Savoyards Head New Week Theater Bills

Will Give 9 Performances; Marshall and Benny Vie on Film House Stages.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

The box-office seat sale for the engagement of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, from London, in the National Theater, beginning next Monday night, opens today. Although the Washington appearances of this distinguished group of Savoyards are limited to a single week, there will be nine appearances of the company, instead of the usual eight, by reason of a Washington's Birthday matinee in addition to the regular Wednesday and Saturday afternoon performances.

The opening performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers" will be sponsored by the Bryn Mawr Club of Washington, and will be attended by one of the most brilliant official, diplomatic and society audiences the National Capital is able to muster.

The week's repertoire of this famous organization will be as follows: Monday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee, "The Gondoliers;" Tuesday night, "Trial by Jury" and "The Pirates of Penzance;" Wednesday matinee and night, "The Mikado;" Thursday night, "Yoemen of the Guard," and Friday matinee and night, "Iolanthe."

Jack Benny, famous stage, screen and radio comedian, assisted by Mary Livingston, will be the star of the stage bill at the Earle Theater for six days of the week beginning tomorrow. Mr. and Mrs. Benny will not appear on Sunday, owing to the necessity of their presence in New York for their weekly Jello broadcast. They will return, however, in time for the first Monday stage show. The screen feature for the new week at the Earle will be "Carnival," a Columbia production in which the pivotal roles are played by Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers and Jimmy Durante. Additional acts in the vaudeville portion of the bill include "The Sizzlers," radio singers; The Danwills and others.

Washington will be the first city in the world to enjoy a public presentation of "After Office Hours," a new M-G-M production, co-starring Clark Gable and Constance Bennett, which will be shown for the first time anywhere this morning at 7 o'clock at the Capital's first sunrise breakfast preview in Loew's Fox Theater. The admission price to this special matutinal performance will include a Continental breakfast. The regular run of the picture at the Fox will begin tomorrow morning at the usual hour. The stage bill will be headlined by Everett Marshall, eminent barytone, and will also include contributions by Charlie Davis and his orchestra, Stuart and Lash, comedians, and Frances Wills and her revue.

Its every scene described as a "living newspaper headline," "The First World War," a Fox release that has been hailed as the most eloquent argument against war ever presented, is scheduled for first Washington presentations at the Metropolitan Theater during the week beginning tomorrow. The picture was edited by Laurence Stallings, who also compiled the sensational book of the same title. Pedro de Cordoba, distinguished actor, delivers Stalling's pungent comments as the picture unreels. Full newsreel and selected short subjects will complete the program.

"David Copperfield," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's superlatively excellent film version of the famous Charles Dickens story, will continue a second week at Loew's Palace Theater, as it so richly deserves, beginning tomorrow. Accepted as one of the finest pictures ever made, this subject enlists the services of a flawless cast, headed by Master Freddie Bartholomew and Frank Lawton in the juvenile and adult title role, respectively; W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Roland Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Edna May Oliver, Jessie Ralph, Lewis S. Stone, Madge Evans and Hugh Williams. Short subjects augment the feature.

That absorbing story of adventurous life as lived by the soldiery at Khyber Pass, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," will continue its F street bid for popularity on the screen of Loew's Columbia Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The principal roles are played by Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Sir Guy Standing and Richard Cromwell. Short subjects will supplement the feature.

Max Coleman, Marty Bohn, of the team of Marty and Nancy, and Harry Bentley are the featured funsters in the "Bashful Flappers" burlesque attraction coming to the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the regular Sunday matinee. Among the supporting stars are Dottie Ahearn, leading woman; Billie Hughes, soubrette; Darlin Lucky, a local favorite; Nancy Lee, the other half of the Marty team; Don Trent and Jack Coyle. The guest star for the week will be Wanda De Von.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

The Club Meets,

Hollywood, February 14.

A SUGGESTION has been made that the Movie Boners' Club give a prize to the picture which doesn't contain a movie boner. This seems like a prize which will never be given away. I can't recall a picture, no matter how carefully produced, which didn't contain a flicker flaw. However, if you have any nominations make them, and if a boner hasn't already been recorded against that picture in this column—which perhaps you overlooked—that picture will be listed here. If a movie fan doesn't write in quickly pointing to a boner in that picture it will not only win a prize, but will become the eighth wonder of the world.

Now the club will come to order and attend to the business of the day. John Courtney is up for membership and the flicker "David Copperfield" is his exhibit.

In the scene after David's marriage, David, played by Frank Lawton, is looking at the budget book. There is a closeup of the book disclosing a drawing of a man's face and a dog on one of the pages of the book. This is followed by a scene showing a dog chewing pages out of the book.

Several sequences later, David comes out of his sick wife's bedroom and picks up this same account book. There is another closeup of the pages with the drawings on them. The book is in perfect condition despite the fact that the dog chewed the pages.

So, such a fine and carefully produced picture as "David Copperfield" can't win the no flicker flaw prize.

WALLACE BEERY in "The Mighty Barnum," insists Albert Cassak, gave a banquet in honor of Jenny Lind, played by Virginia Bruce. During the party a toast is offered to Miss Bruce and Beery drinks the entire contents of the glass. Yet a second later, Beery is still standing, still holding the glass from which he has drunk, and his glass is half full.

It is also noted that Pancho Villa and P. T. Barnum ate the same way, had identical cute mannerisms, and that both wore long underwear. At least, they did when Beery portrayed them on the screen.

In "Gentlemen Are Born," writes Beatrice Minkow, there is the sequence in which Ross Alexander and Jean Muir are being married. The scene shows an Italian woman dancing. At the beginning of the dance she is wearing flat-heeled shoes. At the end of her dance she is wearing high-heeled shoes. Will the fellow who explained what happened to Fred Keating's bird in the cage please explain how this woman changed shoes without stopping her dance?

Gordon Wescott in "Murder in the Clouds" is being chased by a patrol plane. He gets into combat with it and the patrol plane is downed. All the while they are fighting, says Dixon Cannon, the patrol plane is a grayish-colored plane. Yet when it is seen falling, it is a camouflaged war plane.

This is an example of not being able to get a stock shot to match the studio manufactured sequence. The scene of the plane falling was taken out of the clips; probably an actual newsreel shot of a war plane, which accounts for the fact that this plane is camouflaged while the prop plane isn't.

MAE WEST in "Belle of the Nineties" is attired in the costume of the period, as are the other performers. This is fine, says Charles Wondrack, but when La Belle Mae sings her song it is plainly seen that the cornetist had a modern trumpet and was using a muffler, something which didn't exist in the Nineties, regardless of the fact that they were gay. But with Miss West, adds Wondrack, all sins are permissable.

Leo Rogue boasts of the fact that he is one of the few people who saw the flicker, "Elinor Norton," all through. He admits that he and the usher, who was waiting to close the theater, were alone in the theater. In this picture, writes Rogue, Gilbert Roland plays the role of Rene Arbert. In one of the scenes, Roland is lying in bed with a bathrobe on and he is smoking a cigarette. On this bathrobe, where the pocket is located, there are two initials. The initials are G. R. Mr. Roland, it appears, wore his personal bathrobe for the scene.

Shirley Temple in "Bright Eyes" leaves her mother at the Smythe's house for the air field and her Christmas party. As she leaves, an observer, G. J. L., observes that Shirley is wearing a dress and white panties.

However, while Shirley is riding about in the airplane this observer insists that Shirley has changed her panties, for she is now wearing panties to match her dress.

Maryland Shifts Ring Line-up; May Be Choice Over Virginia

Hopes Raised By Farrell, McAboy

Waller and Birmingham Considered as Foes of Rainey.

Nedomatsky Will Fight Brooks, Webb Will Battle Womer.

By Bill McCormick.

COACH JACK HARMONY, pedagogue of punch at Maryland University, yesterday went into a one-man huddle to devise ways and means of revamping his boxing team for the Virginia meet and emerged with a tentative line-up that may result in his socking squadron entering the fray at Charlottesville Saturday a favorite over the Cavalier clouting contingent.

Success or failure of Harmony's revised line-up rests upon the ability of Al Farrell, recently reinstated heavyweight, to cope with Freddy Cramer, and the deftness of Lyman McAboy in coping with the southpaw tactics of Bill McClung, Virginia's 155-pounder.

Not overlooking any possibilities of defeating Maryland, Harmony also is debating between two choicts in the featherweight class to battle with Gordon Rainey, Virginia's conference champion.

Young to Face Hahn.

Maryland will start Jimmy Young, practically its only 115-pounder, against Archie Hahn, co-captain of the Cavalier clouters. Barring unforeseen developments, Hahn should rule a distinct favorite over the little Old Liner.

Billy Waller and Jack Birmingham are the two possible Terrapin featherweights to do battle against Gordon Rainey. Both are fair boxers, but Waller has the edge in experience. Birmingham is a tall, rangy lad and Waller is rather squat in stature, even for a 125-pounder. Harmony must decide which candidate will appear to best advantage against Rainey.

Ivan Nedomatsky, the best 135-pounder in the conference, will, of course, protect the interests of the Old Liners against Marion Brooks. Nedomatsky has won all his bouts this season by knockouts and will be an overwhelming favorite to decision the Cavalier, possibly an even money bet to stop him.

Webb Fights Womer.

Walter Webb, the best 145-pounder Maryland possesses, will be elected to withstand the onslaught of Maynard Womer, conference champion, in the welterweight division. While womer generally is conceded Webb's superior at the punching pastime, the Terp welter is a smart enough boxer to turn the tables against Womer if the Virginian is not up to his very best fighting form.

Harmony's strategy will begin to play an important part in selecting a representative for Maryland in the 155-pound class. Maryland has available for this division Harold Kelly, Mike Lombardo and Lyman McAboy to oppose left-handed Bill McClung, of Virginia.

Superior to Caplin.

Stewart McCaw, who has been fighting lightweights for the Terrapins, easily can make the 165-pound weight limit if McAboy is pushed down to 155. Either McAboy or McCaw is believed by close observers of affairs fistic, the superior of Mortimer Caplin, Virginia's middleweight.

John Gormley, recently discovered Maryland punch artist, can make the 175-pound division if McCaw is shrunk to the middleweight class. Either McCaw or Gormley generally are considered slightly better than John Noll, a good Virginia prospect who hasn't yet found himself.

Al Farrell, ineligible to box because of scholastic standing until recently, now is ready for the wars and if he is fitted into the heavyweight division in place of Gormley, the college enthusiasts should witness a ring classic when he tangles with Freddy Cramer, of Virginia.

Is Just the Type.

Farrell is just the type to give the short-armed Cavalier heavyweight the battle of his life. Because of his extremely short arms, Cramer must work in close to hit effectively. Against Farrell he will be hit many times as he works into close quarters and the result should prove highly interesting, perhaps decisive to the meet.

Conceding Virginia victories in the 155 pound, 125 pound and 145 pound divisions, which are well protected, Maryland's chances of winning the meet or at least tying Virginia, seem very bright.

Nedomatsky must be conceded the 135-pound battle. McAboy has an even chance of defeating McClung in the 155-pound division. Gormley, who then would fall heir to the light-heavyweight berth for the Terrapins, would seem able to cope successfully with John Noll and the Old Liners would thus have better than an even chance to win four bouts before the heavyweight contest.

Should McAboy, McCaw or Gormley falter in the competition, the meet would enter the heavyweight fight either even, with each team having earned 3½ points, or with Virginia leading, 4 to 3, and Maryland's chances of tying the score hinging on Al Farrell.

Olympic Leader Urges Against Japan in 1940

Paris, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—European interest in the Olympic games of 1940 will be killed if they are held in Japan, Armand Massard, president of the French Olympic committee, told the United Press today.

He said that expense of travel to the Orient and time involved would permit "only wealthy amateurs" to compete.

Bevans Fights Firrone On Monday's Program

Pete Bevans, local welterweight, and Joe Firrone, former New Golden Gloves champion, have been signed for a six-round preliminary to the Fritzi Zivic-Johnny Jadick main bout at the Auditorium Monday night.

Bevans has met Bob Wilson, Cary Wright and others in local rings. Firrone has not been defeated in Washington rings.

Rule of Iron Threatens Players

Chicago Baseball Clubs Facing Strict Discipline.

CHICAGO, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Two of the most interesting experiments of the 1935 major league baseball season promise to be supplied by Chicago's two managers—Charlie Grimm, of the Cubs, and Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox.

They are two of the best-liked men in baseball, noted for their congeniality and good humor. Each will attempt to run his club next season with an "iron fist."

When Grimm was elevated recently to the position of vice president of the Cubs, and given complete control of the players, he announced his new policy.

Too Good For Own Good.

"I tried to give my players all the latitude they wanted," said Grimm, "but others have convinced me I made a mistake. I don't think some of the players gave me their best efforts last season, so I am going to try a new policy this season. I'm not going to try to be a taskmaster until a player forces me to, but any failure to keep in condition or violation of other rules will draw a heavy fine. If fining the players doesn't make them obey the rules, then we'll get other players who will live up to the regulations."

Several Cubs, who were teammates of Grimm before he became manager, took advantage of him last season, and he allowed the incidents to pass unpunished. As one player expressed it, "Charlie is too good a fellow for his own good."

Dykes, who succeeded Lew Fonseca as White Sox manager shortly after the season opened, told his players near the end of the 1934 season he planned to crack the whip when the club reached its Pasadena, Calif., training camp.

To "Bear Down."

"There's going to be discipline on our team next season," Dykes said. "I expect every player to keep in condition and hustle for all he's worth. On the first day in training camp, I'm going to wear a placard on my back with the word 'rat' on it. That's what some of the players will probably call me after I start bearing down on 'em. So, I'll just come right out and admit I'm one."

Dykes plans to adopt a rule fining every player $10 for being caught off base. Manager Mickey Cochrane had the same rule on the Detroit club last season, and himself was a victim of his own rule.

Gun Club Will Oppose Invading Teams Sunday

Members of the Washington Gun Club will play host to five-man teams from Annapolis and Baltimore Saturday in a registered shoot scheduled for 1:30 p. m. A silver spoon will be awarded each member of the winning team.

The program will consist of 50 targets from a distance of 16 yards. A special shoot will be held on February 22, with the gun club opposing the National Capital Skeet Club.

Stengel Signed For 3 Years; Pay Raised

Old Contract Is Torn Up by Dodgers; Surprised, Pleased, He Says.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers gave Manager Casey Stengel a valentine today in the shape of a new three-year contract at a sizable increase in salary.

The new agreement runs through the 1937 season. To make the deal possible, the Brooklyn poobahs voluntarily tore up Casey's old contract, which had a year to go.

There was silence as to figures, but the consensus is the Dodgers will pay Stengel between $12,000 and $15,000 a year. The two-year contract he signed last spring is reported to have called for $10,000.

Stengel Makes a Speech.

The signing was announced at a love feast in the club's offices, presided over by the venerable "Judge" Stephen McKeever, Dodger president, and Bob Quinn, the business manager.

Stengel, always the showman, made a speech, posed for pictures, signed with a flourish and did everyhting save break a bottle of champagne over his own head.

Quinn made it plain the idea was their own and entirely voluntary. They were pleased with the way Casey tackled the job last year and impressed with the results. They believe he has the makings of a winner at Brooklyn and want him to go about developing it without the fear of an ax hanging over his head.

"Surprised Rooster."

"I was one surprised rooster," Casey said. "Naturally, I was a very pleased rooster, too. I am glad the judge and his associates have so much confidence in me. You don't see many baseball clubs handing out three-year contracts in these times, particularly when they've already got you tied up."

The Dodgers finished sixth last year, but during the last month were playing the best ball in the National League with the possible exception of the pennant winning Cardinals. The season was not a bad one financially and it turned out to be a great success morally when the merry Dodgers stormed across the bridge and knocked the Giants off in two crucial battles at the end.

N. C., Duke Boxers Battle to 4-4 Tie

Become Co-Champions of Big Five Ring Race.

Durham, N. C., Feb. 14 (AP).The University of North Carolina and Duke University boxers battled to a 4-4 draw here tonight and became co-champions of the big five ring championship race. In a preliminary program Carolinas fr'eshmen registered a 4-3 verdict over the Duke yearlings.

The Carolina team was not represented in the 135-pound class by O'Flaherty, star lightweight, who encountered difficulty with the registrar's office just before the Virginia meet. Medynski and Fisher, two other Carolinians who had experienced similar difficulties, were in the lineup against Duke. Fisher won a decision ovr McCall i the welterweight division and Medynski won by default in the 155-pound class.

Carolina has been defeated only by Virginia this season and Duke is undefeated, but was held to a 4-4 tie by Clemson early in the season. Matulewicz' 35 second technical knockout over Capt. Giddins of Carolina in the middleweight milling was the highlight of the meet.

115 pounds—Diehl (Carolina), decision over Alterman.
125 pounds—Capt. Lloyd (Duke), decision over Kustler.
135 pounds—Kenipp (Duke), decision over Edwards.
145 pounds—Fischer (Carolina), decision over McCall.
155 pounds—Medynski (Carolina), won by default.
165 pounds—Matulewics (Duke), technical knockout over Capt. Giddins after 35 seconds of first round.
175 pounds—Novich (Carolina), decision over Schmidt.
Heavyweight—Granger (Duke), decision over Kanner.
Referee—Charley Short (Baltimore).

Sunday Hockey Urged By Boston Colleges

Boston, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Representatives of the amateur athletic union, Harvard, and Boston College were among those urging legalization of Sunday hockey in Boston, at a hearing before the legislative committee on legal affairs today.

The Lord's Day League and several ministers were among the opponents. Boston already has professional baseball and football on Sunday.

Reynolds to Referee Boxing Meet at Navy

Charley Reynolds, local boxing referee, was named yesterday to work the Navy-New Hampshire dual meet at Annapolis on February 23.

Reynolds, the only referee licensed by the District Boxing Commission to work bouts outside of Washington, refereed the recent North Carolina-North Carolina State dual meet at Chapel Hill.

Baer, Poreda Aid Widow Tonight

Wife of Man Champion Killed Is Expected to Receive $10,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 14 (AP).—Max Baer, the playboy heavyweight champion who now describes himself as "a serious minded man," will pull on the gloves tomorrow night in a benefit bout to fulfill a promise he made five years ago.

The big Californian will meet Stanley Poreda, of Jersey City, in a four-round match headlining a boxing program, the net proceeds of which will go to Mrs. Elsie Camilli, widow of "Frankie Campbell," fighter who died in 1930, the day after he had been knocked out by Baer.

May Get $10,000.

Baer promised then he would return "as champion" to fight a benefit for the widow. The program is expected to net Mrs. Gamilli more than $10,000.

Although Poreda's rating in the heavyweight ranks has dropped since his strong showing in 1932, Baer's representatives decided to take no risk. It has been decided there will be no decision after the bout.

Poreda beat Primo Carnera, Tommy Loughran and the late Ernie Schaaf three years ago but since has been punched out of a contender role. He will weigh around 215 pounds with Baer probably 3 pounds heavier.

Makes Threat.

During a week's training here Baer's only comment was "if Poreda gets tough I'll bat his ears down."

Baer, who visualizes his 240-pound younger brother, "Buddy," as his successor to the title, is making plans to accompany the latter on an exhibition tour in England. Arrangements, however, are indefinite.

Helen Richardson Is Back in Capital

Swim Star to Return to Local Competition.

Helen Richardson, one of the Capital's foremost girl swimmers of two years ago, returned to Washington Sunday from Iowa and yesterday announced her impending return to local competition by going through a fast workout at the Shoreham pool.

Due to an injury suffered at the University of Iowa, where she had been a student, Miss Richardson will not compete in the A. A. U. meet at Shoreham Friday night. She suffered an injury to her back when she landed on the diving board at the university pool several weeks ago.

Miss Richardson, holder of the District breast stroke championship of 1:31 1-5, which she set in September, 1933, is leaving school to accept a position in the Government. While at the Gopher school she won several championships in Midwest competition. Following her injury, she was placed in a cast for two weeks, from which she was released a short time ago.

Allegany Basketers Defeat Barton Quintet

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 14 (Spl.). Allegany High School's second and third string teams proved too strong for Barton High School and the Blue and White boys rang up a total of 25 field goals to subdue the up-creek quintet, 51 to 26, in a Western Maryland Interscholastic League contest played on the Campobello court.

Thomas High Triumphs.

Parsons, W. Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—After being held on even terms for three periods, Coach Emil Suder's Thomas High School quintet rallied to defeat Parsons High School, State champions of 1934, 40 to 35.

Sir Malcolm 'Hits 200' In Trial

Car Rides Beautifully Despite Bumpy Beach, Driver Reports.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—Sir Malcolm Campbell brought peace to his soul today with a test run in the gallant old thunder wagon, Bluebird, but he also uncovered defects that probably will keep his racing car in the garage for at least four days undergoing repairs.

The man who set the present automobile speed record for the flying mile at 272.108 miles an hour rolled the lumbering seven-ton giant to the beach for the first time at noon today, awaking it to this year's quest for 300 miles an hour.

The old lady, as he calls the thunder wagon completely rebuilt, stream-lined to the nth degree, equipped with all kinds of gadgets, responded nicely under the circumstances. There were no time traps set up, so no official record was taken of the speed he picked up roaring through about 5 miles of the course that stretches 11½ miles for the record runs.

Tachometer Breaks.

Campbell's tachometer, a dial on the dashboard in an ordinary automobile, broke the moment he got the car under way after two false starts. There were nothing but guesses, therefore, as to Campbell's speed, and these ranged all the way from Campbell's own estimate of "around 200" down to the 125 or so he seemed to be going to the small crowd of spectators lining the sun-drenched course.

"I passed the airplane carrying my mechanics down the course and they told me they were doing 180," Campbell said after he completed the unexciting run, and with his usual composure went to lunch and then to the golf course.

Close to 200, He Says.

"I believe, therefore, that I must have been doing close to 200. I had my foot down to the floor for all of 2 miles of the way."

The car, Campbell said, rode beautifully, despite the bumpy condition of the beach.

One of his brake bands froze, burning it out, and all the instruments on the board went out along with the tachometer.

The clutch slipped, causing him to lose momentum, and the motor stalled several times. The car went only two lengths the first time he tried to get under way, and only 100 yards the second time.

Each time he tried to test the new flappers in the rear designed to act as air brakes, the motor stalled.

LaRowe, Recovering, Won't See Ring Card

Johnny LaRowe, 67-year-old boxing coach at the University of Virginia, will not be able to witness the dual meet of his charges against Maryland at Charlottesville Saturday night, it was learned last night.

LaRowe, who has been confined to his bed by an injured leg for the past few weeks, has been told by his physicians that he can not leave his confinement to witness the bouts. LaRowe was ordered to bed just before the Virginia-North Carolina meet and was unable to attend Virginia's meet with Navy last week.

Miner Five Meets Shaw.

Miner Teachers College tossers will initiate their second series of home games tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Cardozo High School gymnasium, when they meet the Shaw University quintet from Raleigh, N. C.

They will play the A. and T. quintet from Greensboro Wednesday, Virginia State University on Friday and Delaware State on March 2. All games will be played in the afternoon on the Cardozo court.

'Rip' Collins Signed.

St. Louis, Feb. 14 (AP).—James "Rip" Collins, the St. Louis Cardisalary terms today. A report from salary terms today a report from Rochester that Collins will receive "between $10,000 and $15,000" was termed an exaggeration.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

IT just goes to show that even Shakespeare can be wrong. He was the first guy to inquire, with some disdain, if I remember rightly, as to "What's in a name?" And now, some 300 years later, along comes Lou Gehrig to prove that there is not only considerable in a name but considerable in it if a fellow is fortunate enough to own the right name.

GEHRIG.

A name like Babe Ruth, for example. Here Gehrig arrives in New York from his round-the-world tour and announces he will go to war with the owner of the New York Yankees unless the Yanks give him a contract calling for at least $35,000 per annum. He won't take a cent less, even if he did work for only $23,000 last year. Gehrig asks for $35,000 and that's how the name of Ruth breaks into this column this morning.

At the peak of his career, when he was not as good a ball player as Gehrig, the Babe not only demanded but commanded $80,000 per year. Thus, we have the value of the magic name of Ruth. When he was drawing more salary than the President of the United States, Ruth had passed his prime, was not hitting as many home runs as Gehrig now hits, and had definitely begun to slow up, yet Gehrig can not command half the sum that Ruth was paid.

Because, Columbia Lou is not Ruth by any stretch of even his own imagination. Serious, dull, colorless in contrast to the effervescent, swaggering Babe, Gehrig is admired and respected, but there is nothing of the showman in his play. When he hits another home run, it is just another home run. When he strikes out, it is just another strikeout. It is not Ruth, the crowd-pleaser.

RUTH was the only baseball man since Ty Cobb who could capitalize on both success and failure. As a hero, or a bum, he made a hit with the fans. When he banged 'em out of the park, he was great. When he struck out with equal gusto, he also gave the fans a show. That was Ruth and his very showmanship should have earned him the undying gratitude of big league ball players for years to come.

For it was Ruth who set the new salary scale for ball players. Fellows who, perhaps, were of more value to their team than Babe was to the Yankees, could point to Ruth's tremendous wage and hike their own demands. Of course, it was the Babe's drawing power at the gate that compelled the Yankees to pay him the princely sums, but even so, his huge salary had an uplifting influence on the wages of all big league stars.

Exhibit B in the contrast of Ruth and other stars, less colorful, is Jimmy Foxx, of the Athletics, who in the past half-dozen years has been more valuable to the A's than Ruth was to the Yankees. But Foxx, like Gehrig, and unlike Ruth, was never able to capture the imagination of the fans to the degree of idolism and hero-worship. The A's slugger could do most of the things that Ruth did, but, and there's the rub, he couldn't do 'em in the same grand manner.

So, if the Yankees pay Gehrig the $35,000 he demands, they will be paying him strictly for his ball-playing ability. No man in the world could play $80,000 worth of baseball single-handed in one season, and that includes Ruth, but, unlike the Babe, Gehrig's presence in the line-up is not entirely necessary to maintain the Yankee management in the same style to which they have been accustomed.

Brown Can Find Ring Targets If He'll Only Look Into Files

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—James J. Johnston, matchmaker of Madison Square Garden, and Bill Brown, the newest member of the State Athletic Commission, are finally openly at war. Yesterday afternoon the first real verbal skirmish was fought, and the honest but irascible commissioner stands convicted of digging up old bones because he can not find any new cadavers with which to charge Mr. Johnston.

He excavated the old one about the conviction, fine and suspended sentence that stands against Johnston's record in the little matter of a tax report after the promotion of some minor brawls in an uptown fight club. This is always a measure of wrath against and loss of temper with Johnston. I know, because I once got mad enough at Johnston to dig it up myself. Most every one has. I am not particularly proud of it. The exhumation has lost considerable force and significance through repetition. The corpse does not appear nearly as bad as it did when it was first laid away. If anything, a distinct glamour now surrounds little Mr. Johnston. Since that day when he made a trifling mathematical error to the extent of some $600, some of the greatest names in the country have joined his as tax evaders.

In fact, who among us can afford to heave the first dornick at Mr. Johnston? Certainly, no one who has ever fudged on his income tax. The danger of harping too loudly and consistently on this youthful pecadillo in Mr. Johnston's career is to establish him eventually as a person of too great importance in the community and a national hero who will rank with Insull.

No, that is no line of attack at all to take with Mr. Johnston when vexed. And I suppose the reason that parties who are out of patience with the sharp tongued and quick witted James, keep referring to it because there is really nothing else that can be proved against him, and for that matter, not even much that can be brought in the line of serious accusation. The worst that can be said of Johnston's incumbency at Madison Square Garden may also be noted of Bill Brown's tenancy of the commission seat. Professional boxing has not prospered under either. But whether either one may be wholly blamed for it is doubtful. They both make mistakes.

However, if Commissioner Brown is going to get touchy about past misdemeanors of parties who have to do with boxing, there is plenty of material for him to go to work on; and, once he really takes the excavator's tools in hand and starts digging about through the files of the State athletic commission, I have no doubt that he will come up with some fragrant specimens among individuals who have commission licenses and sanctions to fight and to manage fighters. If we are going to be permanently indignant at our Mr. Johnston for an error against the Government in addition, subtraction and simple proportion, we should also be prepared to sustain some dudgeon against characters who have been convicted for such boyish pranks as unlawful entry, ventilating policemen, borrowing automobiles and forgetting to return them, and other practical jokes that have been rewarded with terms in penitentiaries by juries with no sense of humor.

There is, I believe, a rule on the

Tricks, Often Torture, Are Used to Make Dogs Win in Shows—That's Why Amateurs Fail

By Nelson Robins.

NEW York, Feb. 14 (Spl.).—Tricks, often amounting to sheer torture, are employed by some professional dog handlers to win blue ribbons for their kennels. I make no charges in this expose that will reflect on the Westminster Club or its entrants, but I do want to call attention to the fact that 350,000 New Yorkers own dogs, many of them registered, and that as amateurs their chance of winning a prize is 1 in 1,000,000.

Scan the records and show me a dog owned by an amateur breeder (even though the pup came out of a famous litter of champion brothers and sisters) which ever captured a trophy worth having!

The professional handler has the advantage over the amateur, and, in many cases, an unfair one. I here give you some of the tricks of the trade:

1. Whisky, to brighten dull dogs and quiet too lively dogs.

2. Caustic, applied to the pads of the dogs' feet until they are raw and sore, to make terriers walk on their toes.

3. Belladonna, dropped in the eyes to make pupil fill the whole eye. None but Chesapeake Bay dogs may win blue ribbons if the eye shows more than one color.

4. Turpentine, to make dogs hold tails down.

5. Stopple, to make dogs hold tails in line with spine.

7. Slugging, striking bull terriers in the muzzle with clubs to make it swell and give face desired convex appearance.

8. Wiring, invisible wire sewn through ears to make them stay in the various positions required of various breeds.

No man in the world can tell which puppy in a 3-[illegible]-old litter is going to be the best dog. It ought to work out that some amateur who bought his puppy from a big kennel should get a champion. The litter brothers and sisters, providing they are retained by the big kennel, become champions. Why not an occasional one owned by an amateur?

Well, show me one!

When the handler takes a dog in hand to "ready" for a show, that dog has an unfair advantage which does not belong in sport, so long as every entry hasn't a professional handler. Add to that the judge who is going to give the handler what he wants, and the amateur hasn't a chance in the world.

The nub of the racket is that professional judges, who make their living that way, must have a following or they won't have engagements. The professional handler provides the following—at a price. He must win with the dogs he shows.

The handler is paid $10 per dog at the one-day shows, plus expenses. Frequently handlers will manage dogs for several owners, and he charges, I have been told, expenses to each owner.

Young Golf Pros, Led by McSpaden, Win Most Winter Gold

$2,904 Cash Annexed by Leader

Henry Picard Is Second; Runyan and Sarazen Far Down List.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 14 (AP).—Youth walked off with the greater share of California's golfing gold this season.

Figures compiled here today showed that Harold McSpaden, 26-year-old Kansas City, Kans., professional, cleaned up $2,904.05, to head the parade as the golfers moved Eastward after $33,000 worth of tournament in California and Lower California.

Second to the Midwesterner, who won three championships, was Henry Picard, 27-year-old Hershey, Pa., professional and Agua Caliente open champion. The tall, reticent Pennsylvanian won only one title, but collected cash in all but one of the other events and tied for second in the Oakmont open, Glendale, a day after taking the Lower California event. His total was $2,324.16.

Horton Smith Fifth.

Following closely in third was Vic Ghezzie, Deal (N. J.) youth, who captured the classic Los Angeles open. His earnings for slightly more than two months' of play were $2,195.03. John Revolta, the fourth of the youngster quartet to set the pace, received $2,154.33, although the Milwaukee player failed to take a title.

Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill., was fifth with $2,068.73, and MacDonald Smith, sixth, with $1,960.

Four others won better than $1,000—Ky Laffoon, Chicago, $1,809.66; Harry Cooper, Chicago, $1,563.90; Willie Goggin, San Francisco, $1,267.50, and Jimmy Hines, Los Angeles, $1,117.66.

It was a tough season on most of the veterans. Olin Dutra, national open champion, earned only $215.46, finishing thirty-first.

Old-Timers Win Little.

Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y., national P. G. A. champion, failed to compete in three of the events, but collected the small sum of $211.66 in the others for thirty-third position. Gene Sarazen, New York, who set the pace in 1930 by winning the Agua Caliente championship and $10,000 first prize, gathered $670 this season.

Walter Hagen, Detroit, winner of more than 50 championships in his long career, earned $849.58 to finish twelfth. Craig Wood, Deal, N. J., leading money winner of 1933, when he walked off with most of the major events and $3,962.39, was thirtieth this season, getting $227.50.

Others of the past leaders also fared poorly. George Von Elm, who amassed $7,447 in 1931, received only $55. Fred Morrison, leading cash collector in 1932 when he earned $5,746.66, bagged $425.

Women Golfers To Stage Tourney

An intraclub team competition among women will be inaugurated this season by the Manor Club, it was decided yesterday at a meeting of the women's golf committee headed by Mrs. Howard Simons.

Two teams, one captained by Mrs. L. G. Pray and another by Mrs. E. G. Scott, will engage in a series of five matches, starting early in April. The committee also planned a heavy schedule, with a penny-a-putt tournament to open activities the first week in April. Close to 100 women golfers are expected to participate in golf events at Manor this year, the committee indicated.

Harry Mesmer, former assistant professional at Army and Navy Country Club and Bannockburn, has opened a winter golf school at the Shoreham Hotel. Many prominent local golfers are keeping in trim for the forthcoming season by invading the Shoreham nets to whack away at the ball.

Whitehead and Lynch Miami Golf Finalists

Miami, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—Nip-and-tuck battles saw Charles Whitehead, of South River, N. J., and Art Lynch, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., emerge as the finalists in the eleventh annual Dixie Amateur Golf tournament today.

By one-up victories they defeated their semifinal opponents, Whitehead disposing of Everett G. Livesay, of Columbus, while Lynch eliminated Edward Josce, of Chicago. The 36-hole finals will be played tomorrow.

Mrs. Andrus Is Named No. 1 for Net Tourney

New York, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, Stamford, Conn., was seeded at No. 1 today in the draw for the Women's National Indoor Tennis tourney, which will be held here next week. Other seeded players: No. 2, Norma Taubele, New York; No. 3, Jane Sharp, Los Angeles; No. 4, Helen Pedersen, Stamford, Conn.; foreign, Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, France.

Mrs. Andrus and Miss Sharp are in the upper half of the bracket. None of the favorites meets a well-known player in the opening round.

Soccer Scene Shifted.

St. Louis, Feb. 14 (AP).—The National Soccer Cup match between the Curry F. C., of Pittsburgh, and the St. Louis Marres, originally scheduled to be played here February 24, has been shifted to Pittsburgh, it was announced today.

Although the Los Angeles Harbor Light Station, maintained by the Lighthouse Service of the United States Department of Commerce, at San Pedro, is only a short distance from the city's water mains, the lighthouse gets no water from the city. All drinking water is brought down the coast from San Francisco by boat. The explanation is that the lighthouse tenders operate out of San Francisco, and it is cheaper for them to bring water down as ballast than bring it out from the mainland by barge.

Strange as it seems, the New Testament of the Bible, as it exists today in its oldest form, is several centuries older than the Old Testament. Although, of course, the Old Testament was written long before the New Testament, the oldest manuscript we have of the Old Testament dates from the sixth or eighth century in the Christian era. Early New Testament manuscripts go back as far as the fourth century, or up to 400 years earlier.

The Old Testament as it is known to us today comes from the Massoretic text, and although the story became fixed about the second century A. D., the date of the text is generally placed betweent the sixth and eighth centuries. Among the more important fourth century manuscripts of the New Testament are the Vaticanus and the Sinaiticus.

With the Hunters . . .

By M. W. Meier.

PERHAPS the greatest advance in conservation made in this country for many years was the recent act of President Roosevelt in signing an amendment to the migratory bird treaty act, making it illegal to shoot wildfowl with any weapon holding more than three shells.

No sportsman should object to this new measure. The arms manufacturers have already offered to cooperate and, the only people who can be expected to let out a protest are the ammunition plants.

For many years, automatic and pump shotguns have wasted more ammunition, crippled more ducks and tended to deplete our game supply quicker than all the illegal shooting put together. Many a bird thought to have safely gotten out of range was actually wounded and headed for the nearest covert to die a lingering death.

Pennsylvania and New Jersey have long had laws forbidding the use of capacity-loaded weapons of this type. For years, leading sportsmen, clubs and game officials have begged for a uniform law of this sort. Now, thanks to J. N. Darling, head of the Biological Survey, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and President Roosevelt, migratory wildfowl at least are protected from their deadly, wastly inroads.

The measure as it reads demands that all automatic and pump guns used in shooting duck, dove, snipe, geese and woodcock, be fitted with a permanent metal or wooden plug limiting them to three shells.

Elk Present Problem.

It is a long way from the District to Jackson Hole, Wyo., but we trust that some of you who read this will be actively interested in the fact that out there this moment, some 18,000 to 20,000 elk—America's noblest game animal—are facing death from starvation.

Hard hit by heavy snows and a natural food shortage from the drought, this great herd is yarded up, mutely and dumbly awaiting death. The State of Wyoming and the Biological Survey have exhausted funds with which to buy more hay and cottonseed cakes. They have enough food left to feed 8,000 until March.

What to do with the remaining estimated 10,000 or 12,000 is a problem. Either the Biological Survey must quickly obtain a special appropriation of at least $15,000 or else it must send agents into the Hole country, equipped with machine guns to slaughter the surplus.

Surely those who are interested in saving our valuable natural resources won't permit such a ghastly thing to happen.

Costly Government Error.

One naturally supposes that all Federal bird reservations are under control of the Biological Survey. On paper, this is true.

As a matter of fact, all grazing and watering rights in these areas are under control of the United States Reclamation Service. Under the law they can rent out these areas at 25 cents an acre.

William Finley, noted game photographer and former Oregon game warden, astounded members of the twenty-first annual American Game Conference by telling what this stupid arrangement has cost us in lost game birds and wildfowl.

Last spring when the drought was well along on the West Coast, thousands of nesting water fowl settled comfortably down in the marshes of the Clear Lake (California) and Klamath (Oregon-California) bird reservations to hatch their broods.

Against the protestations of sportsmen and the Biological Survey, the Reclamation Service calmly farmed out the grazing rights and thousands of sheep and cattle were turned into the areas to trample out the lives of the helpless young birds. In their wake they left utter desolation of two of our most important nesting grounds.

This same situation has prevailed for a number of years, according to Mr. Finley, and his protest to the service brought back the statement that the practice would be stopped if the Biological Survey would compensate them from the monetary loss! Their total revenues collected over a period of some nine years, stands at $9,000.

Small wonder our supply of wildfowl is being depleted! This $9,000 of revenue has undoubtedly cost the sportsmen of this noble democracy 100 times as much in potential lost duck and snipe.

Brigadier Wrestlers Defeat Augusta Cadets

Lexington, Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—Washington and Lee freshman wrestlers defeated Augusta Military Academy here tonight, 29 to 3, losing only one bout, when Coiner, of A. M. A., got a time advantage of 2 minutes 14 seconds over Palmer.

Two Foreign Runners Invited To Race Famous American Star

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (AP).—A plan to bring at least three of the world's greatest mile runners together for a race in Madison Square Garden the night of March 16 was announced today by the Knights of Columbus games committee.

The committee has asked the Amateur Athletic Union to invite Jack Lovelock, of Oxford, and Luigi Beccali, Italy's 1,500-meter Olympic champion, over for a race against Glenn Cunningham, America's ace of aces, as a climax to the annual K. of C. meet. If Bill Bonthron and Gene Venzke would like to join they probably will be given the opportunity.

Cunningham holds the present outdoor record of 4:06.7 for the mile and the indoor standard of 4:08.4. Lovelock held the former outdoor mark of 4:07.6, while Beccali held the "metric mile" record of 3:49 for 1,500 meters until Bonthron shaved two-tenths of a second from it last summer at Milwaukee.

Cunningham has won the Columbian mile, feature of the K. of C. indoor games two years, doing 4:12 in 1933 for the best mark of the season, and his record 4:08.4 last March.

Venzke set the then world mark of 5:10 in winning it in 1932, so the last three times have seen the race the climax 8 furlongs of the indoor campaign.

As neither Lovelock nor Beccali is familiar with indoor running it is considered doubtful if they will accept, although Beccali dallied with the idea of coming over last winter.

Virginia Teams Face Heavy Week-End

Basket Ball, Swimming and Boxing Scheduled With Four Schools.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Feb. 14.—Six University of Virginia teams are getting ready for their part in the biggest sports week-end of the 1935 indoor athletic season tomorrow and Saturday.

Action begins at 7 o'clock tomorrow night when Virginia and Washington and Lee start a basket ball double-header. A freshman game precedes the contest between Cavalier and General varsity quints.

Saturday afternoon will find Virginia varsity and first-year swimmers competing against William and Mary. Boxing between the Cavalier freshmen and Augusta Military Academy is due to begin at 4 o'clock.

The Maryland-Virginia boxing match, set for 8 o'clock in the evening, comes as a climax of the week-end activities. This is the last dual meet for both teams before the ninth annual Southern Conference championship tournament here February 22 and 23.

Virginia won the Conference ring tourney last year, with the Marylanders second. Neither ring squad has been defeated this season. Last week-end the Cavaliers showed their battling strength by defeating Navy, 4½ to 3½, but, at the same time, the Old Liners gave a demonstration of fistic skill by downing Penn State, 5 to 3.

Victory over the Midshipmen extended the Cavalier string of ring successes to 23 since the last defeat. But two regulars may be on the bench for the Maryland meet, to give the Old Liners an advantage that may be just enough to enable them to win.

The W. and L. basketeers defeated the Virginians in a January game played in Lexington, but the coaches of Coach Gus Tebell hope to even the count tomorrow night and then to take the final game in the series to be played in Lynchburg February 26.

Virginia's swimmers have won from Johns Hopkins and Randolph-Macon, while losing to Navy, Lehigh and the Richmond Y.

Woodstock Loses Cage Loop Start

Opener Goes to Toms Brook, 23-18.

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—The Shenandoah County basket ball loop opened here last night with Toms Brook taking the Woodstock quintet, 23 to 18, in the opener and the Edinburg Firemen defeating the Mount Jackson dribblers, 24 to 2, in the nightcap.

In the first game the Toms Brook team opened an attack in the first quarter that netted them 12 points while the Woodstock team collected only seven, but were held in check throughout the remainder of the game and the locals were found trailing by only five points at the final whistle.

In the second game the Edinburg Firemen, led by Bud Hottle, opened an attack that put them well in the lead in the first half. They were held in check by the Mount Jackson five in the second period.

Maryland Cutter Wins Yacht Race

Gibson Island Craft First in Miami-Nassau Sail.

Nassau, Bahamas, Feb. 14 (AP).—The jib headed cutter aweigh, owned by Lawrence M. Bailliere and flying the burgee of the Gibson Island Yacht Club, Maryland, today was declared winner of the second annual Miami, Fla., to Nassau sailing race in the corrected time of 30 hours and 4 minutes.

The Game Cock, a 30-footer owned and sailed by William B. Allen of Miami, was second in 31 hours 6 minutes, corrected time, and the 50-foot schooner San Cristobal, of J. Wesley Papa, Fort Lauderdale, was third in 31 hours 58 minutes.

Vadim S. Markaroff's staysail ketch, Vamarie, which won the inaugural last year, was first across the finish line and maintained her record of never being beaten into port, but placed fifth on corrected time of 34 hours 33 minutes.

Schwartz Appointed Creighton U.'s Coach

Omaha, Nebr., Feb. 14 (AP).—Appointment of Marchmont Schwartz, former All-American half back at Notre Dame University under Knute Rockne, as head coach of the Creighton University football team was made today by university officials.

Schwartz, who has been serving as assistant coach at the University of Chicago, was signed to a two-year contract. He will begin his duties here this spring, succeeding Edward Hickey.

Athletes Near Exhaustion And Those Not Warmed Up Are Most Liable to Injuries

By Roland Logan.

IT would take considerable imagination to picture a game, contest or any physical activity that would not involve possibility of injury to the participants. If one were to look for a game involving no risk of injury all of our popular sports would be excluded.

Football, boxing and wrestling are generally regarded most dangerous of sports, but actually, investigation has proven that more injuries are sustained in baseball than in the other three combined. It has been reported that there are more fatalities in swimming than in baseball and the others aforementioned.

Insurance statistics show us that more persons are injured stepping in or out of bath tubs than in playing football.

Dr. James Naismith, inventor of basket ball, and years ago a student and outstanding athlete at Springfield Y. M. C. A. College and McGill University, participated in six sports for ten years and was never injured. Last winter he slipped on a cake of soap in his bath and suffered two broken ribs. Was he sore?

Trainers, Coaches Concerned.

In all seriousness, though, while we feel no necessity of abolishing the more common sports, every injury in a sport is of great concern to trainers and coaches.

The contestant who is in a state of exhaustion or near-exhaustion, and the one who is not sufficiently "warmed up" prior to competition are most liable to injury.

Dr. Floyd Eastwood, instructor in physical education at New York University, in an exhaustive report to the national football coaches meeting on football injuries from 1931 to 1934 found that more injuries were sustained in the first and fourth quarters of football games than in the second and third periods. This finding seems to substantiate the above. Many an unnecessary injury and fatality has resulted from failure of a coach or trainer to sufficiently "warm up" a player or remove one who had reached a state of exhaustion.

The coach or trainer who fails to teach an athlete the technique of body protection fails himself in the long run.

A football player properly instructed in protection, but who fails to thrust out his hand when carrying the ball to break his fall when tackled, can hardly blame anyone but himself if he is injured. The catcher who ducks his head when a batter swings the bat can hardly complain if he sustains a split finger. Technique in avoiding injuries is as fundamentally important as game technique. The coach or trainer, first, however, must bear the responsibility.

Tuck in the Chin.

Prof. Eastwood states that 37 per cent of football fatalities from 1931 to 1934 were due to cerebral hemorrhages, and suggests as a new protective measure now that the player "tuck in" his chin when falling.

Trainers should understand that a player who has been knocked out should immediately retire from the contest, no matter the nature of the contest. History of sports reveals that many athletes who resumed competition, particularly in boxing, after knockout blows, died later as a result of cerebral hemorrhage.

Personally, I am not in favor of young athletes participating in boxing due to the always existent possibility of permanent brain injury, called in the vernacular, punch drunkenness. The human brain is a delicate mechanism and should have the best of protection in any sport. To me, the head gear should be the most perfect piece of protective equipment.

Young boxers, particularly those offensively minded, "take it on the chin" once or twice too often, and the result is that their brains are shocked lastingly. That's punch drunkenness.

Not Entirely Adapted.

The large number of injuries sustained on the football field seem to show that the human mechanism is not entirely adapted to all the purposes for which we often use it. An anatomically minded engineer would certainly design a football player with unusually strong knees, reinforced shoulders and well padded cranium.

Any pressure or weight that causes a joint to over-extend or move beyond its limitations may stretch, tear or pull loose the ligaments. Hence coaches and trainers have designed equipment to support and protect the weaker parts of the body. In this respect, James E. Pixlee, head coach and athletic director of George Washington University, has designed some of the best protective football equipment I have ever seen. His equipment for protection of lame or weak shoulders, in my opinion, has no superior.

Sectional Basket Ball Tourney Set for Elkins

Elkins, W. Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.). The ninth annual sectional basket ball tournament will be held at Elkins March 1 and 2. The same schools as last year—Belington, Beverly, Coalton, Elkins, Philippi and Tygarts Valley—will participate. K. S. McKee, principal of Elkins High School, will again serve as director and Harry Keith of Fairview, W. Va., will be tournament referee.

Coaches and principals of the schools will meet here February 27 to make a drawing for the first game. A foul-shooting contest will again be featured.

Players Vaccinated; Arms Sore, They Quit

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—Basket ball players on the Woodmen of the World team have been forced to cancel their games for the present because of sore arms.

The team went to Boonsboro for a game three weeks ago. But instead of playing, they were vaccinated by Dr. W. Ross Cameron. Their treatment has kept them off the court.

Waynesboro Winner.

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 14 (Spl.). Displaying its best form of the season, Waynesboro High School's basket ball team defeated Dickinson Freshman of Carlisle, 33-21. It was the Tornado's ninth victory in 12 starts.

V. P. I. to Meet, Richmond U. Tonight

Gobbler Quintet Will Play Four Games Away in Next Six Days.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Feb. 14 (Spl.).—A return game with the undefeated University of Richmond Spiders tomorrow night in the Milhiser Gymnasium, at Westhampton, opens a list of four away-from-home contests for the Virginia Tech cagemen in the next six days.

The eastward trek will pit the Gobblers against William and Mary at Williamsburg Saturday in quest of another victory over the Indians. Tech's squad will move on to University to play the Virginia Cavaliers on Monday and will return home for one day of rest before going to Salem to try for a repeat victory over Roanoke College Wednesday. The fast-stepping Tech freshmen will accompany the varsity to Salem to meet the Maroon freshmen, who were defeated, 37 to 22, early in the season.

Rallies Staged.

Recently conquered by quintets of Duke, Washington and Lee and North Carolina State, the Techmen have not failed to show a fair quota of brilliant basketball in thrilling second-half comebacks. The Gobblers have won only two games this season, yet they have repeatedly put on spirited second-half drives that barely fell short of scoring startling upsets.

The Techmen are strengthened by return of Joe Mottola, clever sophomore guard, to the lineup. Louis Fittro, captain-elect of the Tech eleven, is slated to start against the powerful Spiders at the other guard. Frank Evans is well of a recent illness and will share pivot duties with Foots Dickerson and Joe Siegrist. Max Snead and Scrapper Day will start at forward. Evans, Dickerson and Siegrist are the only 6-footers on the squad. Snead stands 5 feet 11 inches, while Day, Fittro and Mottola are 5 feet 4 and 5 feet 8, respectively. Ten men will make the trip.

Frederick Wins Twice In County League Race

Frederick, Md., Feb. 14 (Spl.), Frederick won a double victory over Middletown in the Southern Division of the county high school league, the boys winning 18 to 11 and the girls coming out ahead 44 to 10. The triumph put Frederick boys back into the running for the pennant and the girls' victory moved them into a tie with Brunswick girls for first place.

It was the final game of the schedule for Middletown. Frederick has two games, both with Brunswick at the latter place next week. By winning both tilts Frederick will tie Middletown for first place and force a play-off for the pennant.

How America Discovered an old-time favorite of the Blue Grass country

They knew their whiskey in old Kentucky—just as they relished good food. And they found both at the quaint old hotel in the little town of Crab Orchard.

For sixty years, that whiskey enjoyed a local reputation—then all America demanded good whiskey—straight whiskey—at a popular price—and Crab Orchard whiskey had exactly what they wanted.

That's why it's America's fastest-selling straight whiskey today! Have you tried it?

Deadline Tonight, Registrations Pour in for A. A. U. Tourney

Big Increase In Interest Is Noted

THE basket ball registration market took an upward turn yesterday, as challengers for honors in the 100-pound, 115-pound, 130-pound, 145-pound men's and girls' unlimited divisions of the District A. A. U. tournament scheduled at Tech High next month under sponsorship of The Post sought to escape the deadline.

Tonight at midnight being the deadline, another flurry of eleventh-hour registrations is expected. No registrations will be accepted after midnight, the committee stated, and all 1934 registrations must be renewed if the teams and players hope to be eligible for the big games which start on March 4.

Most of the outstanding teams in the District and vicinity filed their registrations last night to give a bullish aspect to what was a dull registration market earlier in the week.

Increased Interest.

Charlie Fyfe, director of the Boys' Club of Washington, 230 C street northwest, where registrations and entries are being accepted, said last night that more interest was displayed in the tournament than ever before, and predicted record entry lists in each class, particularly the smaller groups—100, 115 and 130 pounds.

"We have more than 30 teams in our league at the Boys' Club," Fyfe stated, "and virtually all of them will compete. The kids thrill at the thought of playing at Tech High's great gym.

Fyfe also indicated that since last year at least 30 new unlimited teams have been organized, and looked for a record entry in the senior division. Fyfe is a member of the A. A. U. basket ball committee headed by Winfree Johnson.

Merrick Boys To Play.

Babe Gearty, Catholic University basket ball star, who is coaching teams at the Merrick Boys' Club in his spare moments, is entering teams in the 100, 115, 130 and 145-pound classes. Takoma Boys' Club also will be represented by four teams, as will the Jewish Community Center, which is reported to have an exceptionally strong unlimited quintet this season.

The committee again calls attention to the weighing-in ceremonies. They will be conducted under supervision of the A. A. U. committee before the tournament begins, and unless a player qualifies for the weight limit he will be barred.

Entries will close at midnight, February 27.

George Zaharias Pins Ernie Dusek

Wins Two Out of Three Falls at Auditorium.

George Zaharias won from Ernie Dusek in a two-out-of-three fall wrestling match which featured a card at the Auditorium last night. Dusek took the first fall in 19½ minutes by forcing Zaharias to resign in a toe hold.

The second fall went to Zaharias in 15 minutes with a body press and the winner took the final fall in 10 minutes in the same manner.

In a semifinal scheduled for 45 minutes, Sandor Szabo won on a disqualification from Willie Davis in 19 minutes. In 30-minute time limit preliminaries, Ed Meske and Emil Dusek labored to a draw and Eli Fischer threw Frank Brunowicz in 19½ minutes with a back fall.

Heurich Flashes Win From St. Mary's Celtics

Heurich Flashes upset St. Mary's Celtics' rangy *-footers last night, 43-38, in the feature game of the Heurich League. Latona starred with 16 points.

In other games, Delaware & Hudson defeated Young Democrats and Fort Myer stopped Katzman Tailors, 37-23.

'I've Got Rhythm' Theme Song Of 300-Lb. Shot-Put Champ

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Jack Torrance, Louisiana's amazing 300-pound, taffy-haired giant, pal of Huey Long and world champion shotputter, arrived in New York today and immediately stomped his size 14 boots upon the opinions of track and field experts who criticized his form in heaving.

The ponderous, self-styled "human cannon" whose 16-pound shot echoed around the world last August when it landed on Oslo's turf after a flight of 57 feet 1 inch, declared, "I got rhythm. And those fellows who criticize my form are all wet."

Rhythm! Imagine this behemoth of the bayous, this elephantine man who packs more poundage on his 6-foot 3-inch frame than Primo Carnera, who has a 49-inch chest and an 18 collar, talking about rhythm like an adagio dancer. Indeed, this looked like one for the book.

"Twenty-two-year-old Torrance expounded his rhythm theory in the downtown hotel room shared by two famous runners, Elton Brown, of Kansas City, and Glenn Dawson, of Tulsa, Okla. They are here, like Torrance, to compete Saturday night in the New York Athletic Club games at Madison Square Garden. It will be Torrance's New York and indoor debut. Young Brown, who has the mumps and will not be able to run, was forced to laugh despite his affliction when the usually retiring Torrance opened up on rhythm.

"I've Got Rhythm."

Torrance said, "I stretched the world record more than 4 feet last year in meets at Des Moines, Milwaukee and Oslo, Norway. What happened? The experts said I didn't know how to put the shot. Well, it apears to me I've got a pretty good idea about heaving the old ball, or else the record measurers must be all wrong. I've been doing it five years, and I've got a style of my own, such as no one else has ever used. I've got rhythm. You see, it's like this——"

It seems that all the shot-putters who preceded Mr. Torrance rushed across the 7-foot putting ring with all possible speed to get the momentum of their bodies behind the ball. But Jack doesn't do it that way. He ambles across the ring, slow and easy, with a sort of backward crouch, swinging low in perfect rhythm. He is completely relaxed all the time.

Torrance's critics say he does not get his body behind the shot, that he does not take full advantage of his 300 pounds. "As if my weight and height gave me the entire heave," complained the champion. "They forget that Ralph Rose, who was champion about 1912, weighed 320 pounds. His record was about 51 feet. Why didn't he throw it 57 feet? He rushed across the ring like the rest of them. Didn't have my form."

Expects to Better Record.

Who figured out this rhythm business? Torrance and his track coach at Louisiana State University, Bernie Moore, who recently was promoted to head football coach. This is Torrance's fifth year at L. S. U. He is taking a postgraduate course in teaching. He was All-Southern football tackle at L. S. U. and varsity basket ball center.

Although Big Jack had been training only two weeks for Saturday's competition, he was confident he could break the world indoor shot-put record, 52 feet 8¾ inches. Before the Olympic games next year he hopes to be heaving the shot 60 feet.

And after the Olympics, he will turn professional; become a boxer or wrestler. He was not certain which. But he is sure that he wants to cash in on his brawn in one of those sports.

What about Huey Long? "Oh, he's a great fellow, and a pal of mine. I hope he comes up from Washington for the meet Saturday."

Johnston-Brown Find Ammunition

commission books that no gentleman who has ever been convicted of a crime may be endowed with the official blessing of the commission to act in any capacity in and around prize fights. I know that not many years ago there were quite a few gentlemen operating in and around the ring who had paid their debt to society by lodging for the required length of time in this jug, or that. Nevertheless, they appeared as owners and operators and even seconds of prize fighters and nothing was said about their youthful horse play, at least not much, because a few of them were known to be still handy with a heater.

I do not know whether any such still hold commission licenses as seconds or managers, or even pugilists, but if Commissioner Brown is going to haul forth the long past by the heels and wave it in front of the old gentleman who is matchmaker for the Madison Square Garden, a reputable business concern, I would suggest that he be sure that Mr. Johnston or perhaps some enterprising busybody could not enter the closets of the state's boxing house and come out with some slightly more macabre skeletons.

This department is all for a good name-calling fracas because it keeps the columns of the newspapers bright and chatty, but I think there ought to be some rules which would protect a gentleman from indiscretions. It seems to me it is sufficient for Mr. Commissioner Brown to point out that Mr. Johnston has not been a conspicuous success at his post in the Garden, and equally sufficient for Mr. Johnston to indicate that for all the good he has done and for all his honesty, Mr. Commissioner Brown has been a considerable nuisance to boxing in New York.

Japanese Off for U. S.

Yokohoma, Japan, Feb. 14 (AP).—Japan's first professional baseball team sailed today for an invasion of the United States. The squad of 18 players is mostly the same as the Nippon All-Stars who furnished rather poor opposition for the recent Japanese barnstorming tour of Babe Ruth's big league stars.

Takoma Club to Meet.

Takoma Boys' Club, planning to enter three teams in the District A. A. U. basketball tournament, will meet tonight at the Takoma Fire Department at 8 o'clock.

3 Golf Events Cross; Face Juggling

Maryland State, Southern Amateurs Conflict With Manor Play.

A THREE-WAY conflict in golf tournaments in the Middle Atlantic section is proving embarrassing to three associations, and will call for some expert juggling of dates.

The Maryland State Golf Association yesterday made known that it had set tentative dates of June 19-22 for its annual amateur championship—the same week the Southern amateur championship will be played in Richmond and the Manor Club will stage its invitation tournament.

Southern Amateur officials, through their Richmond representatives, have indicated that they will seek to have the Manor dates changed, in order to interest District golfers in their big tournament scheduled to open on June 18. Richmond has protested vehemently, but Manor plans to stand pat on its dates of June 18-22.

District Association officials have explained that there is little or no interest in the Southern Amateur in Washington, and that only three or four local golfers might enter. Thus far Army and Navy Country is the only District club that has joined the Southern.

Peacock Champion.

The Maryland State Amateur championship, won for the last two years by Indian Springs' Roger Peacock, is one of the most important tournaments in this section, and Maryland officials, headed by Nathan H. Kaufman, Suburban Club, have stated that they deserve preference in the dates.

June is a crowded tournament month, and the conflict means either the Middle Atlantic championship, scheduled June 12-15 at Virginia Beach, must change back to its old dates in July to make way for the Manor Invitation, or the Maryland State Amateur must accept dates in July.

The Middle Atlantic, looked upon as the "clearing house" of the Virginia, Maryland and District Associations, probably will stick to its present dates. Manor will be asked to yield the June 18-22 dates to the Maryland State Amateur and accept dates in May—something Manor doesn't want to do.

The National Open is scheduled June 6, 7, 8, and no event is going to be held that week. The week of June 24 the National Intercollegiates will be held at Congressional.

20 Fighters Found In Talent Search

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—Twenty pugilists of all varieties will battle for future employment tomorrow night on a "search for talent" program rounded up by Nate Lewis and Jim Mullen at the Chicago Stadium.

The young men have been paired off for ten bouts at six rounds each, and those who do well enough will be brought back to the stadium for more important assignments. Only flyweights, bantamweights and light heavyweights are lacking from the list.

Special attention will be paid, by Mullen and Lewis at least, to Eddie Hogan, young Waterbury, Conn., heavyweight; Mike Belloise, New York featherweight, Mike (Kid) Frattini; middleweight from New York, Billy Miller, of Milwaukee, who meets Frattini; Eddie Carroll, Ottawa, Ontario, lightweight, and Paul Lee, of Indianapolis.

The order of events:

Roy Lazar, New York, and Joe Jordan, Nashville, Tenn., heavyweights.
Dutch Weimer, Tucson, Ariz., and Johnny Vorce, Detroit, heavyweights.
Chuck Heffner, Denver, and Bobby Mathews, Paducah, Ky., middleweights.
Eddie Hogan, Waterbury, Conn., and John Pasek, Chicago, heavyweights.

Red Fleming Recites 'The Kid' —Just Testing C. U.'s New Mike

"RED" FLEMING.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

"W both were of a weight, the Kid and me, e weighed in at one hundred and thirty-three."

The opening lines of that immortal prize ring ballad, "The Kid's Last Fight," boomed down from the amplifiers and rolled out into the near-empty Catholic University gymnasium with such volume that it seemed the walls would do a Jericho.

A reconant, deep voice it was that unfolded the tearful tale of the Kid and his pugilist friends. It belonged to a tall, angular chap identified as Red Fleming, better known in the collegiate cauliflower industry as Catholic University's best and only 175-pounder.

Fleming's record of four consecutive knockouts this season entitles him to recognition as one of collegedom's most enterprising jawbreakers, but yesterday he reverted to the role of Thespian. But he did it only because they needed someone with a heavy voice to test the mike while electricians tuned up the new amplifying system being installed in the gymnasium.

Firm, Confident.

The big red-head spoke his piece with the firmness and confidence of an old trouper. His gestures were perfect as he punched the Kid dizzy before the mike. His diction—the pathos in that streamlined voice was excellent as he announced despondently:

"I lifted up his head—good God, the Kid was dead."

"How'm I doin'?" he concluded, addressing a group of the faithful parked on the sidelines. The faithful faithfully gave him the berry and Fleming retired gracefully, a winner, but this time only on points.

It was typical of Fleming to volunteer yesterday when some one was needed to test the mike. He offered his services to the boxing team last year when Coach Ed LaFond had no 175-pounder and simply had to have one. And in typical Fleming style, he did a good job of it, winning three of his four fights, two by knockouts.

Tomorrow Fleming faces the most important fight of his college ring career and one of the best leather-pushers he will meet in amateur competition. We refer to Bernie Kaplan, Western Maryland's 175-pounder. Kaplan is one of the invading Terrorists' three best men, and he comes to town seeking revenge.

Both Seek K. O.

Fleming whipped Kaplan last year, but he couldn't knock him out, and now Kaplan announces that he intends to kayo Red to prove that his victory last season was a fluke. Big Red is prepared to prove that it wasn't—and prove it by a knockout.

Fleming is an orthodox buster, but he has a left hand that travels about a half-foot and strikes with the effectiveness of a sledge-hammer. That left hand has felled Bob Pethick, Bucknell; Montgomery, Temple; Don Schmitt, Duke, and Jack Oatley, V. M. I., this season, and his punishing right has finished them off—left them groveling in the resin.

A prominent ring career looms before him when he quits the campus and goes out to battle the world, but Big Red would rather play baseball. He's a catcher and a pretty good one, and the diamond sport is his first love.

Western Team Continues To Win

WESTERN HIGH SCHOOL, fresh from its six triumphs in the interhigh series, took advantage of a weakness from the foul stripe on the part of the Bethesda five yesterday to gain a 17-to-16 victory at Leland.

Failure to convert but 2 of 11 foul shots contributed to the Montgomery County champs' defeat. The winners were successful in five out of nine, including a technical one called on the Bethesda rooters in the third period for excessive booing of a decision.

The game was featured by the guarding of both clubs. Western forwards held Bethesda's three guards scoreless, while no winning player scored more than four points.

The Georgetowners led until late in the fourth quarter, holding a 6-3 advantage at the first period, 10-9 at the half and 15-11 at the third. Eddie Johnson pulled the Bethesdans out of their scoring slump with a potshot and followed this with a sensational one-handed shot that tied at 15 all.

Johnson Stars.

With 3¼ minutes to play, Jerry Burns stepped out with a basket, sending Western ahead 17-15. Hanley went out on fouls 2 minutes later and Lodge made good to bring the Bethesdans' total to 16; but 2 long potshots failed and Brennan missed a foul shot at the final whistle.

Eddie Johnson, spurred by the attendance of his famous father, Walter, Cleveland Indians manager, hit the hoop for 10 points and scoring honors, far ahead of anyone else.

Wilrob Is 2d, 1½ Lengths In Rear

Youth Scores Double, Hanging Up His 15th Winner of Meet.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—An all-claiming race program made up the mid-week offering here today, with the riding of the tiny apprentice, Georgie Watson, the nearest thing to a feature. The pint-sized youngster, leading "bug rider" at Tropical Park, as well as at this point to date, completed a double by guiding B. N. Kane's Annarita to an easy triumph in the 7 furlongs of the fourth race.

Annarita, a failure in two starts at Tropical Park, led Wilrob to the wire by a length and a half, with Momo losing the place by a similar margin. The winner, paying $6.80, was second choice to the dull-running Lucky Turn. The latter was the fourth straight losing choice of the day and the eleventh beaten favorite, including the previous day's eight events.

Fifteenth of Meeting.

Annarita was little Watson's fifteenth winner of the meeting and placed him two ahead of the full-fledged jockey, Wayne Wright, at the current session.

Wilrob, a speedy quitter, stole a lead of several lengths, which he maintained to the head of the stretch. There Watson called on Annarita and the filly dashed to the fore to win going away. Momo closed a lot of ground to beat the Fred Shuffle On for the show.

Johnny Gilbert, the solemn Syrian, again demonstrated that he has no peer at riding 2-year-olds here this winter when he gave the first-time starter Transit Lady considerable help to account for the opening dash. Kansas Johnny shot Transit Lady to the front, but had to work hard to keep his mount a narrow margin in advance of the fast-working "field" horse, Holdum Brown. The latter offered stubborn resistance, despite his swerving tactics. Transit Lady won by a head and paid $15.50. Browbeaten was a fast-closing third. Krona dropped back steadily and was a very poor favorite.

Happy Find Victor.

Form players were bounced back again when Idle Victory had to lay second fiddle to Happy Find—9.10 for $2 chance ridden by Georgie Watson. Miss Elegance was a bang-up third. Watson sent Happy Find into quick command, shook off Miss Elegance and drew away from Idle Victory when the latter challenged, three lengths separating the pair. Miss Elegance was a half-length farther away

Sun Idol, favorite in the third, added to the talent's misery by finishing out of the picture. Wild Pigeon, a New England invader, won in a gallop and paid $37.20. Lady Laura was second, five lengths back and three parts of a length before Last Time. Wild Pigeon went to the head end and ran his field dizzy, finishing the 6 furlongs in 1:12 flat.

Trey Takes Fifth.

The smart money was for Trey in the fifth event and the gelding wound up favorite. He proved the first successful choice of the day, running as if much the best. Eddie Arcaro had the $6.50 for $2 hazard breezing to his field and the combination registered with four lengths to spare. Full Up, a rank outsider that returned $60.10 for place, forced the pace and lasted to beat Predict by a half length.

Stickhandle carried the bulk of the play in the sixth. He was no match for the well-backed second choice, Right Rank, which came along in the last furlong to score by a full eight lengths. Mae Skilling beaten a length for the place, would have been second with a little farther to go. Stickhandle raced Slave into submission in the first 6 furlongs and had nothing left when Right Rank challenged. The latter rewarded at the rate of $6.80 for $2.

Shot and Shell, $9.20, was first home by two lengths in the last race. Master Lad beat Cousin George by a half length for the place.

Flashes Face Olmsted.

Heurich Flashes and Olmsted Grill will meet at 2:30 p. m. Sunday at the Heurich gym in the preliminary to the feature game between the Philadelphia Spas and Heurich Brewers. The Spas, appearing here for the first time, are champions of the American League.

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, Feb. 14.

Those horse owners who shipped mudders to this track are beginning to believe they wasted their time. With only two exceptions, the track has been fast every day of the meeting to date. On the two days that the track was slightly off before the program began, it had dried out before the last race. The mudders probably will have to wait for Bowie. Little Georgie Watson, who is the leading local apprentice rider, is said to be only 13 years old but passes for 15. He was forced to ride one pound overweight recently when assigned a mount with 89 pounds. He may be small but he whips a horse like Workman, and most of his victories are come-from-behind affairs with his whip deciding the issue. Trainer Joe's landlady told him either to pick her a winner or pay his room rent. Being broke, Joe is trying to get her even tomorrow with an across-the-board bet on Vera Cruz. BILL.

First race—Squawker graduated from the maiden ranks in impressive fashion and may take care of this field. Distract is a big colt with a future. Should go well. Glory Greenock to take care of the others.

Second race—Merovech is packing a lot of speed these days and seems to have found another spot that suits. Quickly will have something to say about the purse distribution. Light weight may make No Saint a threat.

Third race—Ding Bin, scratched today to await this sprint, seems well placed and should earn a set of brackets. Broadsword looks like the one to beat. Erebus' recent win points to top form.

Fourth race—Broad Meadows is the class of this group. Packs 114 pounds, but I'm stringing along. Civil War and the heavily-weighted Ridge Mor to take care of the others.

Fifth race—Vera Cruz set a terrific pace last out before dropping out of it in the stretch. Might show enough improvement to score in this field. Chief Mourner has only 101 pounds and may run up to those good trials. Mock Turtle for the show end.

Sixth race—Golden Way, a recent winner, has a fighting chance to score. Clocker Mike makes this his best bet. Venetian's last must be thrown out. I expect a better race tomorrow. Wise Advocate, despite high weight, is dangerous.

Seventh race—Standout fits this company and this distance. I see no reason for mistakes. Idle Flirt has worked well and should make a money appearance. The long route and light weight give Yellow Metal an outside chance.

Silver Spring Faces Alexandrians Today

An improved Silver Spring High School team, victor in four of its last five starts, entertains Alexandria High today in what promises to be the feature contest of the year in the Inter-Suburban League.

The Twins, weakened by the graduation of Apperson and loser to Washington and Lee last week, are not the heavy favorites they were in Alexandria where they dealt the Taksils their worst defeat in the school's history. Sammy Wolfe, all-county forward last year, apparently found his ailing scoring eye and with an improved morale after an upset win over Rockville the hosts may throw in a win and send the Twins into second place behind the Little Generals.

Governor Threatens Hot Springs Racing

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 14 (AP).—A positive declaration that a proposed horse race meeting at Hot Springs would not be held except in a legal manner was made today by Gov. Futrell.

The Governor said that if the House bill to legalize pari-mutuel betting was not passed by the Senate, he would take whatever means possible to prevent the meet scheduled to start February 22 at Hot Springs.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRANSIT LADY, $15.50, $8.30, $5.00; HOLDUM BROWN, $6.00, $4.30; BROWBEATEN, $17.10.

TRANSIT LADY, away very fast, ran straight and stood long drive gamely. HOLDUM BROWN, on the outside, swerved over to the inside and the boy had all he could do to keep him out of trouble. BROWBEATEN, away slowly, worked her way up and ran a smashing good race. WILLOW WOOD is improving. KRONA was never a contender.

Profit Taking Halts Upswing Of Corn Prices

Cotton Absorbs Selling and Closes 1 to 5 Points Higher.

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—Heavy buying of corn for industrial use gave all grain values a lift today, but the markets reacted later because of pressure to realize profits.

A new jump in hog quotations to the topmost point since 1930 provided early impetus for corn price upturns. On the other hand, corn feeding demand apparently dwindled later on account of market advances. There were reports, too, that a bumper crop of new corn was expected in Argentina.

Corn closed irregular, ¼ cent to ½ higher, compared with yesterday's finish, May, 85⅞@85½; wheat, ⅛@½ down; May, 96⅜@96¾; oats at ⅛@¾ decline and provisions varying from 10 cents setback to a rise of 5 cents.

Corn scored a maximum gain of nearly a cent a bushel before beginning to react. Relative strength of corn, in contrast with wheat, was more or less due to the fact that provisions, as well as live hogs, were today excelling previous top-price records. Trade authorities said consumer demand for corn was making its appearance in a definite manner, despite a tendency most other lines evinced to delay new business for a time.

Few Offerings.

Attention was also drawn to statements that rural districts were not offering corn in more than a thin trickle, and that under these conditions the stocks of corn at distributing centers must supply increased requirements. Notice was likewise taken that the Government estimate of the number of animals on farms is due tomorrow and would be regarded as an indicator of the effects of shortage of corn and other feeds.

Cotton Market

Cotton showed an even tone today on trade buying and covering, which absorbed some further near month liquidation and scattered selling. The close was steady at a net advance of 1 to 5 points.

There was a little early selling in response to disappointing Liverpool cables. March liquidation remained in evidence, with considerable switching from that month to later deliveries.

General commission house business continued quiet on the advance which carried March up to 12.37 and October to 12.36, or 5 to 6 points net higher during the middle of the day.

A little more cotton was encountered at these prices and later fluctuations were irregular, but sufficient trade buying made its appearance to steady the market at the close.

Exports today were 23,951, making 3,173,067 so far this season. Port receipts, 5,544; U. S. port stocks, 2,709,020.

Auto Firms Look For Record Trade

Seek to Sell 1,000,000 Units in First Quarter.

Detroit, Feb. 14 (AP).—The motor car industry's hoped-for production of 1,000,000 passenger cars and trucks during the first quarter of 1915 apparently is to be easy of attainment.

Output for January exceeded preliminary estimates by many thousand units, reaching an approximate total of 310,000, and with schedules for February being stepped up generally, the current month will see another 350,000 cars and trucks run off the assembly lines.

Proper Relation Between Government and Central Bank Will Be Subject of Debate When New Bill Comes up for Discussion.

New York, Feb. 14.—The question of the proper relation that should exist between a government and a central bank, which has been made a burning current issue in this country by the new, Administration-sponsored banking bill, has long been a subject of discussion abroad. The practices of the older foreign central banks will doubtless be brought up repeatedly in the debate on the question that is certain to arise in Congress.

In Europe, two general types of relationship between the central banks and the governments may be distinguished. These are typified best by the Bank of England and the Bank of France, respectively.

The Bank of England is completely independent of the government in its organization. In fact, aside from its charter, there is no special statutory provision applicable to its operation. This greatest and most influential of all central banks is managed by a court of directors elected by shareholders, and by a governor elected by the court.

The Bank of France, on the other hand, is subject to a fairly extensive statute governing its operation. While its board of regents is elected by stockholders, both the governor and the deputy governor are appointed by the government. Through the power to change the governor, which was only recently exercised in order to cause the bank to modify its policy, the political administration of the country is in position to influence the central bank. Most central banks in continental European countries tend to resemble the Bank of France in their relations to the government, in that they have private boards of directors elected by shareholders, but the head of the government retains the authority to appoint the executive head of the bank.

Central Banks Abroad Controlled by Directors.

It is very significant, however, that regardless of the form of organization of the central bank, in actual practice such institutions in all countries except Soviet Russia are managed by a board of directors, or similar body, which represents the financial and business community of the country. Thus, the regents of the Bank of France only recently openly disagreed with the government's plan to liberalize the central bank's discount policy as to short-term government securities, which the Flandin cabinet desired as a means of reducing interest rates and abating the pressure of deflation within the country. This opposition, it appears, has caused the government to moderate its original plans, thus bowing in part to the wishes of the conservative financial community. In Fascist countries, it is true, the role of the boards of directors has been informally curtailed.

The Bank of England, as shown in the Macmillan report and other competent surveys of its policy, has been able to cooperate quietly and informally, but none the less effectively, with the British treasury, while retaining its complete independence. Recently, this relationship has become especially close, since the bank manages the exchange equalization account, although the fund is owned by the government.

The pending banking bill of 1935 proposes a degree of permanent Government control over central banking far beyond anything found in either the British or the French systems. The effective control of credit is to be transferred, under this bill, to a new Federal open market committee, three out of the five members of which are appointed by the President. This committee, which is to buy and sell Government bonds for the 12 Federal Reserve Banks without requiring specific approval from their boards of directors, becomes the real directing body of the system in the control of credit. There will be no private board that will have the authority to oppose the decisions of the politically appointed majority of this committee as to open market operations.

U. S. Policy Seeks Control of Credit.

Inflationists and expanionists everywhere have been contending that existing central banks have been too conservative, and that they have stood in the way of a relaxation of lending standards which would hasten the end of the depression. Only in the United States, among democratic countries, however, is the Government now actively seeking to have undisputed control over credit policies to turn over to a politically controlled committee, which shall be able to override the privately elected boards of directors of the Reserve Banks. The similarity between what is proposed here, and what is favored by inflationary thinkers abroad, is reflected in the following broad description of current thinking on central banking in Europe contained in David W. Dodwell's recent book on "Treasuries and Central Banks":

"How best to obtain independence for a central bank in ordinary working, together with adequate power for the government to control the broad lines of policy without friction and delay, is a real problem. In the decade following the war the tendency was to try to strengthen the independence of the central banks to protect them against the demands of governments with chronic deficits. Today the desire to use monetary policy as a major weapon in the fight against world depression is causing a movement in many quarters toward more government control."

Other democratic countries seem to be fighting off successfully similar inflationary agitation to break down existing safeguards around the independence of central banks. The banking bill of 1935, however, makes this threat especially current and acute in the United States.

U. S. Issues Lead Bonds To Higher Level

Federal Obligations Bring Increased Market Demand.

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—United States Government obligations led the bond market into higher ground today. Although the general improvement was limited, a firm tone was apparent during the day. Volume increased a little, largely because of more active demand for Federal issues. Sales totaled $8,650,000, par value, compared with $7,870,000 in Wednesday's session. In the late trading, investment and speculative demand fell off a little, but most issues closed at their highs for the day, with the majority of the list showing fractional improvement.

Home Owners Loan 3⅛s was the bellwether of the United States loans, making a new high for the year at 99.6 on a good demand. Gains of from 3-32ds to 10-32ds were chalked up for Treasury 3¼s at 104.16, the 4¼s of 1947-52 at 114.26, and the Federal Farm Mortgage 3⅛s at 103.

Utility bonds improved in price in the general corporate list, although there was no apparent reason for the better feeling in this division.

Rails also came in for their share of the investment buying and worked fractionally higher. Erie General Lien 4s at 78½, Florida East Coast Railway 4½s at 64 and Santa Fe General 4s at 109½ were typical of the advances in this group.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Quotations staged a smart recovery on the stock exchange today, operators throwing off their nervousness and continuing their buying which started after Wednesday's close. Gilt-edge securities led the general advance which was maintained with the exception of home rails and German bonds, both groups easing on profit-taking. The market closed firm.

Paris—International issues recovered on the bourse today due to favorable advices from London, while strength in rentes lifted French issues. The closing was firm.

Berlin—Traders' attention turned from stocks to bonds which were firmer on the boerse today. The closing was extremely quiet.

U. S. Treasury Receipts.

(Associated Press.)

The position of the Treasury on February 12 was: Receipts, $6,099,705.30; expenditures, $14,725,862.36; balance, $2,201,711,731.23; customs receipts for the month, $9,913,400.96.

Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $2,175,016,787.64; expenditures, $4,257,984,180.55 (including $2,181,607,500.39 of emergency expenditures); excess of expenditures, $2,082,967,392.91; gold assets, $8,434,510,797.79.

Durable Goods Demand Totals 46 Billions

Survey Shows Backlog for Construction and Other Needs.

A total accumulated demand of $46,000,000,000 for durable and semi-durable goods is estimated by Herve Schwedersky, in an article on "The Estimated Backlog in the Construction and Durable-Goods Industries" in the current issue of the Annalist.

Of this total, durable goods accounts for $38,000,000,000, distributed as follows: Residential construction, including repairs, $14,000,000,000; other construction, including repairs, $12,000,000,000; consumers' durable goods, $5,000,000,000; producers' durable goods, $7,000,000,000. In addition, consumers' semi-durable commodities are estimated to amount to $8,000,000,000.

The author bases his figures on the estimates made by Dr. Kuznets for the National Bureau of Economic Research; by Leonard Kuvin and by several other authorities, each of which he discusses with particular regard to the differences in method, material and conclusions. The theoretical shortage which they indicate, he notes, "may not necessarily always be cumulative over a period of years, since a certain amount of that potential business is undoubtedly lost." On the other hand, they "do not provide adequately for the natural growth of the country and its population."

"A study of the available data," he observes, "indicates that the greatest potential demand for construction and for durable goods is to be found in the needs of the individual and not of the corporation. Based on Government estimates, there are over 16,000,000 private homes in need of repairs, while 3,000,000 of them are beyond rehabilitation and should be completely rebuilt. There is an additional shortage of some 2,000,000 homes to take care of the increase in the population . . . Because of the low purchasing power of large groups, however, it is probable that during the next five years only a portion of this demand will be filled."

He then discusses the status of those who will have to furnish the demand, noting that they must be employed, have some savings, feel at least moderately confident about their own future, and have access to mortgage money at low rates of interest.

The Markets at a Glance

What the Stock Market Did.

Stocks—Securities showed little or no animation yesterday and confined themselves to the narrow rut they have held in the past weeks. Eastman Kodak gained 3 points on the recent dividend announcement. Turnover was up slightly to 403,326 shares.

Bonds—Federals led the list in loan trading yesterday, adding substantially to the general firm tone apparent through the session. Most issues closed at their highs for the day. Sales rose to $8,650,000.

Curb—Issues continued in a narrow range, with irregular price changes. Specialties showed strength. Trading volume was down to 118,000 shares.

Wheat—Heavy corn buying boomed grains in the early session, while profit taking caused a reaction toward the close. A depressing feature toward the close was furnished by bumper crop reports from Argentina. May wheat closed at 96⅜ and July at 89⅝. May corn closed at 85⅝.

Cotton—Trade buying and covering sustained the market against generally disappointing Liverpool cables. The close was steady at net advances of 1 to 5 points. May closed at 12.40.

Coffee—Spot coffee was weak, Rio No. 7 selling lower at 8¼ and Santos No. 4 dropping to 10⅜.

Sugar—Raw sugar was unchanged at 2.86. Refined sold at 4.30 for fine granulated, also unchanged.

Silver—Bar silver was up ½ in New York to close at 54⅜ cents per ounce. In London it sold 3-16 pence higher at 24⅝d. (U. S. equivalent 54.12 cents per ounce).

Dollar—The United States dollar was steady in foreign exchanges. It stood in New York with reference to other currencies, 4.87¾ to the English pound; 6.59½ cents to the French franc; and 40.13 cents to the German mark.

Daily Credit of Reserve Banks Averages $4,000,000 Higher

(Associated Press.)

Monetary gold stocks of the United States reached the heretofore unparalleled peak of $8,456,000,000 during the week ended February 13, through the addition of $35,000,000 during the period, the weekly condition statement of the Federal Reserve Banks disclosed.

This figure is $1,367,000,000 of the gold total on the comparable dates a year ago.

The condition statement said: "The daily average volume of Federal Reserve Bank credit outstanding during the week ended February 13, as reported by the Federal Reserve Banks, was $2,467,000,000, an increase of $4,000,000 compared with the preceding week and a decrease of $142,000,000 compared with the corresponding week in 1934.

"On February 13, total Reserve Bank credit amounted to $2,450,000,000, a decrease of $16,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with a decrease of $53,000,000 in member bank reserve balances and increases of $35,000,000 in monetary gold stock and $22,000,000 in Treasury and national bank currency, offset in part by increases of $23,000,000 in money in circulation, $65,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks and $5,000,000 in nonmember deposits and other reserve accounts.

"Relatively small changes were reported in holdings of discounted and purchased bills, United States government securities and industrial advances.

"Changes in the amount of Reserve Bank credit outstanding and in related items during the week and the year ended February 13, 1935, were as follows (in millions of dollars):

Bankers Urged To Extend Aid In Trust Field

By Karl von Lewinski.

Extension of the trust facilities of the country's banking institutions was strongly advocated by Rudolf S. Hecht, president of the American Bankers Association, in a speech before the fiduciaries conference of the American Bankers Association in New York.

Hecht, who is chairman of the board of the Hibernia National Bank of New Orleans, said a recent survey showed only 2 per cent of bank customers were using the trust department.

"Obviously, if our trust departments are serving only 2 per cent of our clientele, the field for increased business is unlimited," he said. "Consequently, a continuous program of public education is essential in order that our trust companies may be given the opportunity to render the maximum of service."

Are to Be Examined.

The association president called attention to "the comparatively recent development for the thorough examination of trust departments by national and State supervising authorities," and said he believed "the trust officers of all of these banks are well satisfied with these arrangements, and that their only desire is to get as much uniformity into these examinations as possible."

He gave the assurance that the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency were taking steps to standardize trust department examination methods and routine.

Goodrich To Represent Law Firm.

Judge Edward Jennings Goodrich, a member of the United States Board of Tax Appeals since 1931, has resigned effective today, to become the Washington representative of the New York law firm of Guggenheimer and Untermyer.

Judge Goodrich, whose home is in Charlestown, W. Va., practiced law there for ten years prior to his appointment to the Tax Board. During his active law practice he specialized in Federal and State tax cases.

Born in Anoka, Minn., in 1896, Judge Goodrich attended the University of Iowa until America declared war. Serving first with the Third Minnesota Infantry on he Mexican border, he later saw service overseas and after the armistice with the Army of Occupation.

GOODRICH.

He was admitted to the Iowa bar in 1922, and a year later moved to West Virginia.

The firm of Guggenheimer & Untermyer is successor to Samuel Untermyer and boasts one of the most extensive law practices in the United States. Their office here has been established to handle the numerous problems that have arisen from the extensive Federal program. Offices will be located in the Investment Building.

Bankers Urged to Buy Federals.

W. L. Hildeburn, of the Chase National Bank, addressing the mid-winter meeting of the trust division of the American Bankers Association at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, suggested Government bonds as one of the current safe propositions for investment.

This solution to the problem of accumulated funds in banking institutions was suggested likewise by the majority of speakers on the same program.

Hildeburn pointed to the example set by many citizens with incomes in the higher brackets, who are taking advantage of the tax-exempt securities to lighten their income burdens.

He urged Government bonds as a good investment likewise for the funds of widows, orphans, incapables and other beneficiaries for whom trust officers must act, declaring that "under existing conditions Government bonds will doubtless remain the most liquid and stable investment market-wise, pending the arrival of a more propitious time to reassort the portfolio."

Strictly high-grade bonds, he said, are selling at a premium, which reduces the yield to about 3 per cent; moreover, bonds purchased at a higher price may entail loss because they may be paid off immediately at their face value by "many o. the large corporations which have found it advantageous and profitable to borrow money at rates much below the coupon rate of its bonds and to retire them under the terms of the bond indenture."

Call Carl Election.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of Call Carl, Inc., the following directors were unanimously reelected for the ensuing year: Chapin B. Bauman, Joseph A. Burkart, Herman F. Carl, Edmund O. Carl, Louis C. Carl, Frederick Carl, James E. Smith and Eliot H. Thomson.

At the organization meeting of directors immediately following, the same officers were reelected as follows: Herman F. Carl, president; Edmund O. Carl, vice president; Louis C. Carl, secretary; Frederick Carl, treasurer.

Curb Quiescent As Some Issues Move Higher

Pepperell Manufacturing and Technicolor Rise 2 Points Each.

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—The curb market continued to move in a narrow trading channel today. Mild price irregularity prevailed and volume was around the recent low levels.

A few specialties moved higher, including Pepperell Manufacturing and Technicolor, up around 2 points each, while Bunker Hill & Sullivan and New Jersey Zinc both receded around a point.

Fractional improvement was shown by Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Hiram Walker, Lake Shore, Newmont and Swift International. Slight recessions appeared in American Cyanamid "B," American Gas and Electric and Sherwin-Williams.

Transfers were about 118,000 shares, compared with 120,000 the day previous.

Forgotten.

I've read "The Life of Edmund Gosse," a critic and a bard, who put some handsome prose across, and wrote verse by the yard. And he was sure his fame was fixed forever and a day; he viewed his work with joy unmixed, and voiced a loud "Hooray." He walked with Browning in the light, and Swinburne was his chum, with Tennyson he'd spend the night with talk and chewing gum. A man of fine, abiding charm, of talents rich and rare, he walked with great men arm in arm, and breathed the purer air. He wrote a deathless tragedy that died when it was born, and his distress was sad to see, his heart was rudely torn. He wrote a novel that was hailed as something none might spurn; it was another light that failed ere it began to burn. He wrote fine poems, short and long, a ton, or maybe more, but in the fragrant fields of songs he made a goose-egg score. But while he lived he had no fear his fame would know a blight, and all the great men, far and near, assured him he was right. He rooted for the good and great, and they would root for him; the whole nice bunch would congregate and root till lights grew dim. The book is full of honored names that once were brave and gay; their owners played their little games, and died and blew away. They walked with high and haughty tread, those prodigies remote, and now their fair renown's as dead as Julius Caesar's goat. Now other heroes, other braves, at Fame's fine target shoot; but they are sleeping in their graves and do not care a hoot.

Hikers to Visit Canal Planned By Washington

Wanderbirds to Observe Anniversary of First President Sunday.

By Robert Shosteck.

The Wanderbirds Hiking Club will observe Washington's birthday by a visit to the old George Washington Canal below Great Falls, Va., built about 1802 under the direction of the Father of His Country.

This 4-mile trip along the most scenic section of the riverside trail includes a visit to the ruins of Matildaville, a short-lived community which grew up in the vicinity of the canal at the time of its operation. Also on the itinerary of this trip are Difficult Run Falls, Holly I., Stony Acre and Black Pond.

Readers of The Washington Post and club members planning to go on Sunday's trip will meet at 10 a. m. in front of The Post Building where buses will carry the hikers to Great Falls Park. The round-trip fare will be 50 cents and reservations must be made in advance at National 4200.

Hikers should bring along lunch and a cup for coffee. The trail as far as Holly Island is open and easy going. From this point to Stony Acre, a distance of one-half mile, the trail is very rocky and includes some climbing that requires caprine agility. Those who do not care to rough the latter portion of the trip can turn back at the falls of Difficult Run.

To Inspect Ruins.

The hikers will spend an hour at the falls, visiting the ruins of the canal and the Washington foundry and enjoying the river vista from the observation tower. Starting the southward trek, the group will inspect the walls and ruins of the old jail of Matildaville, the only sizable remains of the prosperous village which existed from about 1802 to 1830. Beyond the jail, in the rich bottomland woods, the trail parallels the mossy walls and locks of the canal. On the nearby rocky ledges the hikers may possibly find one of the first spring flowers, the delicate blue hepatica.

At Sandy Landing the hikers will pause for a view of the cove famous for swimming, and quench their thirst at the nearby spring. The trail soon enters the ridge road, an abandoned woodland road which follows the crest of the hill to Difficult Run. Descending to the stream, the route lies along the bank of the run to Holly Island or the series of rapids farther up. A crossing can be made at either place after makeshift bridges are improvised.

Trail Is Rough.

The trail on the far bank of the creek is very rough in places but can be negotiated with a little care and patience. The scenery is very rugged and quite inviting to club photographers. Beyond the mouth of Difficult Run, and along the river bank to Stony Acre the trail is roughest of all and the scenery most attractive. The trail is little more than a scramble from one great boulder to another. Except for the giant sycamores near the river, the only trees to be found here are a few scraggy pines and cedars. We skirt Black Pond and Yellow Pond, making our way over the rocks to Stony Acre Island, opposite Cupids Bower. Stony Acre belongs to a member of the Wanderbirds Hiking Club and club members are always welcome there.

After a rest on the topmost rock of this islet, the hikers will retrace their steps the half mile to Difficult Run, thence to Sandy Landing and along the riverside trail to the falls. This alternate route affords an opportunity to view the Potomac Gorge and the palisade of Bear and Cleft Islands on the opposite shore. The group will have coffee around a campfire at the falls, returning to the city shortly after 6 p. m.

Old Registry Is Found In Statue of Liberty

The National Park Service yesterday announced discovery of an old registration book, containing 81,000 names, which for 30 years lay buried in a neglected corner of the Statue of Liberty.

Each of the book's 1,500 pages carries 54 names, the signatures of those who registered as visitors between 1890 and 1906. Opening the book at random, George A. Palmer, acting superintendent, came upon the date of August 8, 1894. On that date, the register revealed, there were 69 visitors, as compared with 1,262 on August 8, 1934.

The register will be displayed in a new case on the main landing, which has been renovated through PWA funds.
